"T'WILL BE CAL"

"My judgment is that the next President—the next man to lead the party—is the man who is now President," Senator Simeon D. Fess, Yellow Springs, made this as a prophecy in his address at the community picnic here Monday night. In the same speech he deprecated attempts of friends to sponsor him as a candidate.

ABANDON HOPE FOR MISSING OCEAN PILOTS

Week Passes Since Dole Flyers Lost—No Clues Found

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23.—Hope for the five missing Dole flyers and their two would-be rescuers, Capt. Billy Erwin and Alvan Eickwaldt, had all but vanished with the coming of dawn today—one week after the ill-fated "Golden Eagle" and "Miss Moran," hopped off on their disastrous attempt to reach Honolulu.

Capt. Erwin and Navigator Eickwaldt, aboard the "mercy" plane "Dallas Spirit," have been missing since Friday.

Not a single authentic clue as to the fate of the three planes and their seven occupants has been found, despite the fact that innumerable naval vessels, planes and fishing smacks have searched every mile of the great circle course between here and Hawaii.

Reluctantly friends of the missing flyers are resigning themselves to what seems the inevitable. Sympathy centers on Miss Mildred Doran, the 22-year-old Flint, Mich., school teacher, who was a passenger on the plane named for her, piloted by Augy Pedlar and navigated by Vilas Knope.

The fact that Commander Rodgers remained aloft nine days and was finally rescued, inspired a faint hope in the hearts of some, but the less optimistic reason that Rodgers had a seaplane and was better equipped for the pounding of the waves. It is thought hardly likely that any of the three missing planes could now be afloat.

BLOODHOUNDS HELP POSSES SEARCH FOR ALLEGED MURDERER

Hundred Acre Swamp Believed Hiding Place Of Killer

MT. VERNON, O., Aug. 23.—Bloodhounds and a posse of a hundred armed men led by Knox County deputy sheriffs today were searching a hundred acre swamp, at Fredericktown, near here, for the trail of Richard Cole, alias Joseph Smith, alleged slayer of Harry Swank, 17, Ankenytown.

Swank was killed, and Richard Roberts, 20, was shot Sunday night during an argument at Fredericktown. The alleged slayer, fled after the shooting, and search for him was made Monday near Mt. Gilead and Fredericktown. The Mt. Gilead search proved fruitless and Monday night bloodhounds were brought from Pomeroy to scour the swamp, where a man was reported hiding yesterday.

Roberts was discharged from Mercy hospital, here late Monday and returned to his home at Newark.

COMEDIAN SETTLES $825,000 ON WIFE AND TWO CHILDREN

Decree Expected To Cost Celluloid Clown Over Million

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 23.—The big studio tent of "The Circus," Charlie Chaplin's unfinished picture, was hoisted and staked out again today as the comedian, now a free man, prepared to resume his acting after an eight months' layoff. Lita Grey Chaplin received an interlocutory decree of divorce from Chaplin yesterday. The comedian settled $825,000 upon her and her two small sons in a property settlement reached out of court.

A trust fund of $200,000 for Sidney Earle, sixteen months, and Charles Spencer, Jr., twenty-six months, was included in the settlement. Mrs. Chaplin will have the babies' custody and will administer the trust fund on their behalf.

Although Chaplin himself was expected to go today to Catalina Island for a short rest, other members of the cast of "The Circus" were ordered to take up work at once on the unfinished comedy. Chaplin and his supporting players, including Merna Kennedy, leading lady, stopped work on the picture when his wife sued for divorce eight months ago.

"The Circus" must be turned over to United Artists for Christmas release, Alfred Reeves, manager of the Chaplin studios, declared, and nothing will be permitted to delay it further.

With the general terms of the property settlement upon Lita Chaplin made public, speculation centered today upon details of the huge award. According to reports considered trustworthy, Mrs. Chaplin will receive $375,000 in cash. The remaining $450,000 will be paid over a three-year period, it was said, with four per cent interest accruing upon the deferred payments. The trust fund will be established within five years, it was reported. Until that time Chaplin will pay $1,000 a month for the care of the children.

In all, the divorce action is expected to cost the comedian well over one million dollars, including such intangible losses as lost earning power during the past eight months. Not considering the loss of earning power or his own attorneys' fees, it was reported that Chaplin will pay approximately $950,000 for his freedom.

SENATOR FESS BELIEVES PARTY WILL DRAFT CAL: FESS NOT CANDIDATE

Fess Boom "Newspaper Talk" Yellow Springs Solon Tells Crowd—Thinks Convention Deadlock May Force Coolidge's Hand

United States Senator Simeon D. Fess, Yellow Springs, not only declared there is no foundation for statements that he will be the next Republican candidate for President but prophesied that the 1928 leader will be President Calvin Coolidge, addressing more than 2,000 people at Xenia's community picnic in Shawnee Park Monday night.

Senator Fess was preceded by speakers who paid him tribute with prophecies that he would be the next man to occupy the White House. These prophecies were burst when Senator Fess began his address. "Let me say that while I appreciate for the sake of my family the fine utterances made in reference to my own candidacy, there is absolutely no foundation for reports of any further honors coming to me," Senator Fess said.

The speaker gave as his reason for the persistent mention of his name as a Presidential potentiality, the fact that he had made friends with Washington newspapermen with whom he had built up friendly relationships by taking them into his confidence on important matters. As a result he holds these friends responsible for the reports of his strength as a candidate, he said.

"These notices published in newspapers favorable to your speaker this evening are only the kindly expressions of the newspapermen," he said. "My own judgment is that the next President—the next man to lead the party—is the man who is now President."

Coolidge Sincere. "That isn't his wish. I've talked to him for three years on this subject and he keeps his own counsel. He doesn't even talk to his wife. You will be interested to know that when he made his announcement August 2, that he did not choose to run again, he did so without consulting Mrs. Coolidge."

Senator Fess returned last Thursday from the West, during which

WOMEN SURVIVORS SHRIEK WITH ANGUISH AS DEATH NEWS COMES

Defense Workers Receive News In Varied Moods—Last Defense Card Left Unplayed—Unable To Get Plane

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—Piercing shrieks re-echoed through S. Russell St., West End, as Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti went to their doom this morning.

In the S. Russell St. Apartment of Friends, Miss Lucia Vanzetti, who had crossed the seas from Italy to bid farewell to her "Barto" and Mrs. Rose Sacco, the brave and loyal wife of "Barto's" comrade, received the terrible news. It was relayed to them by telephone from state's prison, across the Charles River in Charlestown.

The cries of anguish of the two grief-stricken women, perhaps the most pathetic figures in the Sacco and Vanzetti case, awoke the neighborhood. Many residents went to the streets.

A crowd soon gathered outside the apartment house. A detail of police kept the crowd at a respectful distance from the house, later members of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense committee arrived to console Miss Vanzetti and Mrs. Sacco.

"Death watches" had been kept at the two Sacco-Vanzetti headquarters. At the old committee headquarters in a modest building on Hanover St. in the North End more than 100 men and women gathered. Every race and creed, every walk in life, gathered to hear the word that the two men had gone into eternity. This six years of labor by the defense committee and women was over—they had lost.

Aldino Felicani, who organized the committee, nervously paced back and forth across the little room, with its wooden tables and single battered typewriter, from which had come reams of copy for the press.

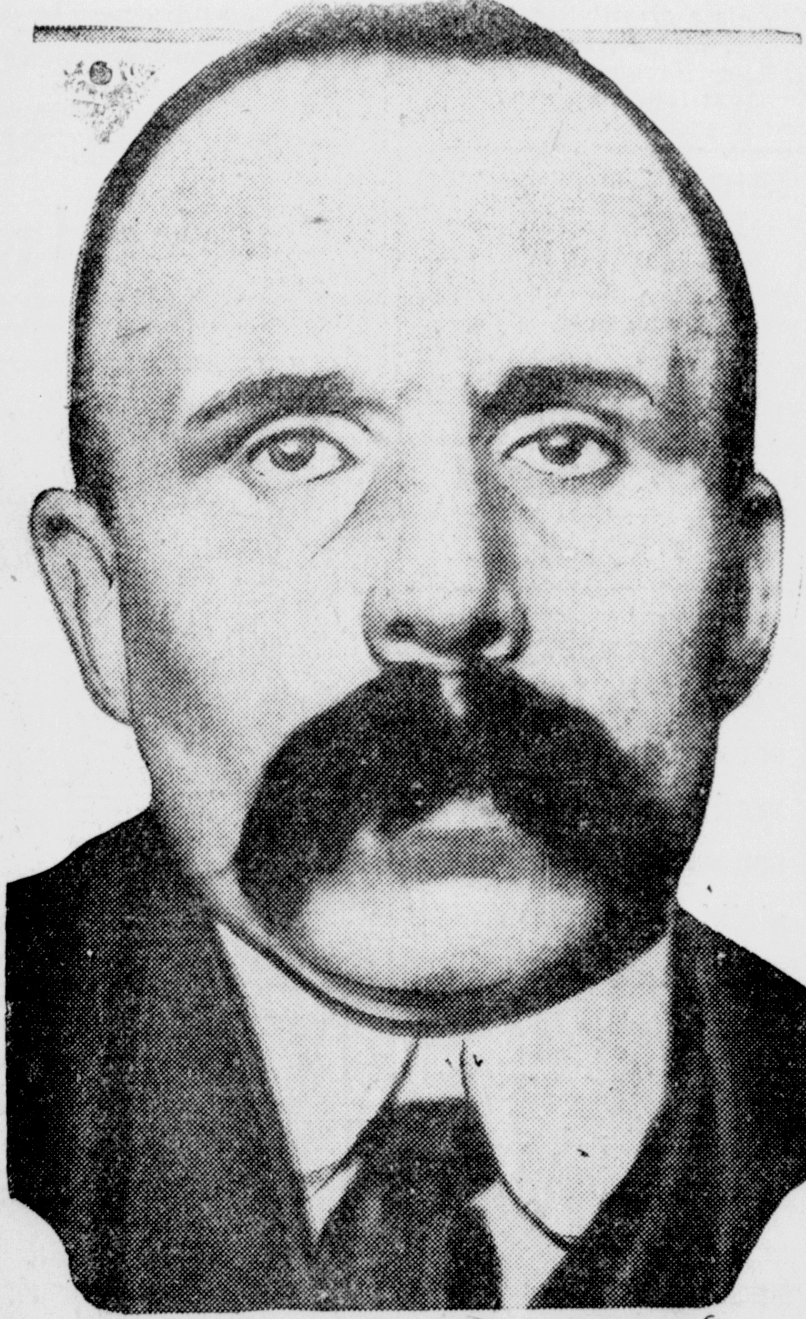

Miss Mary Donovan, an ardent defense worker, almost fainted when the words "they are dead" were pronounced.

At the new defense headquarters in a hotel on Beacon Hill beside the state house—the Citizens Na-

AIR EXHIBITION

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 23.—Nine army truck loads of bombs, bomb racks, parachutes and other airplane paraphernalia used in U. S. Air Service have arrived at the state fair grounds here for a display during the fair. In addition there will be nine planes, seven of which will be flown to Columbus this week. Two others, one a skeleton plane, showing its construction and a small messenger plane will be shipped by truck.

HE LIT A MATCH Hubert Ponder, Vine St., lighted a match to see how much gasoline there was in a vessel after he had drawn the fluid out of the tank of his automobile in the alley at the rear of his residence at 11:30 Monday night. The gasoline in the can exploded and fearful of a resulting fire, the fire department was called. Firemen extinguished the blaze in the can.

RADICALS DIE AFTER FINAL EFFORTS FOR RESPITE ARE FUTILE

Electric Current Ends Seven Year Fight For Life—Vanzetti Shouts Innocence—Madeiros Also Dies—Police Guard Prison

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—Sacco and Vanzetti are dead—but the hue and cry of their dramatic passing rang around the world today.

The end of the seven years fight for life by these convicted radicals—a fight unprecedented in American criminal procedure and unprecedented, too, in its effect on world opinion—came in the eerie hours of this morning in drab old Charlestown prison.

Whining sing-song of an electric current whipped through their bodies and burned out their lives while the guns of 2200 police encircled them to make sure they did not escape Massachusetts justice.

Nothing like it was ever witnessed in an American city. The streets of Boston and other cities saw marching and near-rioting in sympathy with them. From Kamchatka to Rio the radicals of the world protested the innocence of the condemned men and demanded their liberation. In London, Paris, Berlin and Moscow there were riotous demonstrations against America—but they died just the same in grim old Charlestown prison hard by the monument on Bunker Hill, and today their bodies lay on marble slabs in the North Grove mortuary.

To the radicals of the world and to their sympathizers among the intellectuals, Sacco and Vanzetti were symbols of legalistic and capitalistic oppression, and martyrs to the cause of political liberalism.

To the law of Massachusetts, master and his guard at South Braintree, and who for seven years have managed to escape paying the penalty thereof.

They died as they lived—defiant, contemptuous of the "system" that took their lives, unrepentant, unorthodox, and protesting their innocence to the end. They went to the chair with their heads up, their tread firm, unafraid and without benefit of clergy.

Sacco died almost with "long live anarchy" upon his lips. Vanzetti, older, more kindly, philosophical, proclaimed his innocence while seated in the chair, and was pronouncing his forgiveness of his enemies when the guards stepped back and signalled for the fatal current.

"I am innocent of all crime," said Vanzetti, without attempting theatrical gestures. "Not only this one, but all."

He spoke simply, in a quiet voice, as if he had said, "I am tired," he

FRESIDENT OF KENT TARGET OF CHARGES MADE BY GRADUATES

Trustees Considering Report Anderson Is "Dictatorial"

CLEVELAND, Aug. 23.—Trustees of Kent State Normal College were to reconvene here at 11 a. m. today, to consider charges of mismanagement against Dr. David L. Anderson, president of the school.

Despite statements from board members that a meeting here Monday was purely routine, it was learned that the trustees began additional work, late yesterday, had heard at least 100 charges filed by the college alumni against Anderson, which apply to every phase of his administration. Most important among them were charges that Anderson had failed to preserve peace in the faculty and that he was extremely "dictatorial."

Although board members here denied that Anderson was to be ousted, press dispatches from Columbus Monday stated that friends of the Kent president were urging Governor Donahue to request the trustees to retain him.

Anderson has held office one year.

During that period he has dismissed over a score of the faculty.

DAYTON ON EXPRESS COMPANY AIR LINE

DAYTON, O., August 23.—According to announcements coming from official sources in Cincinnati, Dayton is to be on the air line to be opened September 1 by the American Railway Express Co. Distribution of express matter originating in Dayton will be through Chicago for the west and through Cleveland for the east, via train between Dayton and the two distribution points.

It is said that more than 100 planes will fly over the route in daily service, delivering express from New York to "Frisco" in two days. Packages up to 200 pounds will be handled at a rate of about $2 per pound. Fifty cubic inches is the limit on the size of the packages. No packages will be handled for less than $1.

STEPHENSON RULED THOUGH REIGN WAS MARKED BY FEAR

By BONITA WITT
Staff Writer for Central Press and The Evening Gazette

(This is the Fourth Installment of a Series on Indiana's Political Drama.)

The history of D. C. Stephenson, whose continued exposure or threatened exposure have put Indiana on edge, is a dramatic chapter in itself. He ruled—or thought he ruled—a commonwealth. At least, he had many followers.

To many in the state he seemed a leader cast from the skies. And he might have been, for his impression by arriving at meetings from the skies—in an airplane.

He was out of nowhere. He often said: "It's nobody's business where I was born or who my folks were."

Stephenson was born, however, in Houston, Tex., 36 years ago in 1890 with his parents, brother and sister he moved to Mayeville, Okla., where he finished out the eighth grade in school and then found employment as a printer's apprentice. His father was a tenant farmer and very poor.

In 1911 young Stephenson went to Purcell, Okla., with his brother. The two operated newspapers in Purcell and two other small Oklahoma towns—Byars and Paul's Valley.

That section at the time was undergoing agitation by wandering Socialists, and young David took up his journalistic cudgels against them. Later he succumbed to their doctrine, probably fascinated by fantastic phases of the cause. He became a Socialist lecturer and soon gained a reputation in the region as an amateur orator.

His First Marriage
Stephenson married Miss Nettie Hamilton while in Oklahoma and there are charges that he deserted her shortly after their child was born in 1916.

Stephenson was drafted for army service in 1917 while employed at Boone, Ia., as a linotype operator. Originally a corporal on recruiting duty, he gained a commission as second lieutenant, but saw no service overseas.

Mustered out, Stephenson went to Akron, O., and it is believed made speeches to defeat a congressional candidate "accused" of pro-Germanism. At the same time he promoted the Akron Morning News. It failed.

In Akron he married Miss Violet Carroll. They were divorced in 1923. The year 1920 saw Stephenson in Evansville, Ind., where he organized a coal mining company, said to have holdings in a neighboring county.

Joined With Political Power
Evansville was then under the political thumb of the late Mayor Benjamin Bosse, Democratic state chairman, a man of dynamic character and an uncanny ability to frustrate stronger enemies.

The success of Bosse in the field of politics drew Stephenson to him, a willing disciple. About this time the fingers of the Ku Klux Klan stretched from Atlanta, where the order was born, and first touched Indiana.

Stephenson threw himself into the movement. It seemed the thing for him.

Descends on Indianapolis
Stephenson's rise was meteoric. He became grand dragon of the state Klan and moved from Evansville to Indianapolis. The rise of the Klan and its rapid increase in power virtually made Stephenson, as he stepped off the train at Indianapolis, an uncrowned king entering his new capital.

Court Ashur, former airplane pilot for Stephenson, has been quoted in the past as giving these figures:

Stephenson's pockets received $250 to $300 for every new member admitted to the state Klan. Initiation fee was $10 for the individual. As the Klan soon numbered approximately 400,000 men and women of the state, the golden harvest reached surprising figures. At the peak, a national credit concern gave Stephenson financial rating at $884,000.

The grand dragon built a home in the exclusive Irvington section of Indianapolis. He had a yacht on the Great Lakes valued at $100,000. It later was burned.

Life One of Fear
Though the golden rain gave him increasing luxuries, the grand dragon was haunted by shadows.

ASKS $10,000 FOR DAMAGES RESULT OF AUTO COLLISION

Alleging that he suffered injuries of a permanent nature when an automobile driven by the defendant's minor son collided with his car at the intersection of the Federal Pike and the Jamestown and Cedarville Pike, August 1, Hiram Rogers brought suit for $10,000 damages against Maude Warner in Common Pleas Court Monday. Attorney Charles L. Thompson filed the action.

The petition recites that Rogers was driving his automobile east on the Federal Pike, and at the intersection of that pike with the Jamestown and Cedarville Pike, stopped his car, looked to the right and left, shifted into low gear, looked to the right again, and while his car was still in low gear it was struck broadside by the defendant's machine, in which she was a passenger, and which was traveling toward Jamestown.

The crossing in question is a dangerous one the petition recites, because the view to the plaintiff's right and to the defendant's left, were obscured by woods, cornfields and telegraph poles, but that instead of observing caution on that account, the driver of the defendant's car approached the crossing at the rate of 40 miles an hour. Although brakes were applied fifty feet from the crossing, the petition says, the plaintiff's car was pushed more than thirty feet on the roadway, turned, and his head thrown violently against a knob on the door. His neck was injured, all his jaw teeth loosened so that they will have to be extracted, his right shoulder bruised, he was cut over the right eye on top of the head and he suffered a severe nervous shock and is still under the care of a physician.

NEGLECT CHARGED
Mabel Clowney charges John Clowney with neglect in an action for divorce. They were married September 5, 1918 and have a son aged seven years who is a ward of the juvenile court.

CHARGES INFIDELITY
Unfaithfulness is charged by Calvin Brown in a suit for divorce brought against Goldie Brown. They have one child, Paul Leroy. They were married July 5, 1924. Clyde Shoemaker is named as co-respondent in the case.

The Queen Anne Home Heater is in reality a good furnace—yet requires no pipes, no registers, no basement. It healthfully circulates warm, moist air through every room in the house.

At the cost and convenience of but one fire, the Queen Anne will warm the upstairs as well as the downstairs, often replacing three or four stoves. Thousands of homes with as many as five to eight rooms—are being supplied with this modern furnace heat by Queen Anne Home Heaters. Also extensively used to heat large halls, churches, theatres, schools, stores, offices, garages, etc.

A fully enclosed, high grade, all cast, genuine warm air furnace, in a beautiful period cabinet. It is not a converted stove. Has 20 to 100 per cent more heating capacity—is built to heat more rooms or larger spaces than other heaters—and is built like a furnace to do it.

FRED C. KELLY WILL VISIT IRELAND TO SEE FATHER'S HOME

To visit the old home of his father in the little town of Guilford, in the "old County Down," Ireland, is the object of Fred C. Kelly, author and former Xenian, who will sail from New York Saturday on the liner Cedric for Queenstown.

He will be accompanied by R. M. Brinkerhoff, illustrator on the New York Post. They expect to stay two weeks in Ireland, and then tour other parts of the British Isles and the continent, spending about two months on the trip.

R. A. Kelly, father of Fred, and a pioneer rope manufacturer of Xenia, died when the boy was ten years of age.

"I remember sitting on his knee, and coaxing him to tell me about Ireland, and the spot where he was born, in a 'little town called Guilford' in Down."

"I want to go there to Guilford, and loaf in the livery stable and talk to the people and just browse around, and if possible find the house where father was born, and some body who remembers him," said Kelly.

The elder Kelly came to this country a penniless boy when he was eighteen years old. He had worked some at the linen and hemp business in Ireland and Scotland, and in Patterson, N. J., went with a firm that was making machinery with which to manufacture flax, sisal and manila rope. Later he came to Delaware where he built the first five machines, for laying and finishing hemp twine, and brought them to Xenia in 1876, placing them in the plant of the Hoover and Allison Company which had been making rope by hand. The R. A. Kelly Company, with his son George R. Kelly, as its head, is a monument to his name and industry.

Fred C. Kelly, his youngest son, has been spending the summer at his farm near Peninsula, O., and with his son, motored to Xenia several days ago to visit his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Kelly before sailing. He will leave his automobile here, going on by rail to New York. He will leave Xenia Tuesday.

Mr. Kelly is the author of "Kelly grams," a syndicated feature that appears daily on the editorial page of the Gazette.

His son Fred, 16 years old, is returning to New York with his father and will enter school in Washington this fall.

MURPHY CONVICTED OF ASSAULT CHARGE BY PROBATE JUDGE

James Murphy, Dayton, was found guilty of committing an assault upon Constable Sidney Cornelius of Bath Twp., near Osborn the night of July 23, by Probate Judge S. C. Wright, Tuesday.

Judge Wright mailed a copy of his decision to Attorney Gates Oblinger, of Dayton, counsel for Murphy, and he was given three days from August 25 in which to file a motion for a new trial.

The alleged assault was committed when Constable Cornelius visited a camping party on a farm near Osborn at the request of the owner of the farm who complained that the campers had burned a gate. The assault was said to have been committed when the constable seized a jar in the hands of Murphy which he said he believed to contain liquor but which members of the Murphy party said held pickles. Later a gun in the hands of the constable was discharged, he declares by accident, when Murphy struck his arm and the shot entered the left leg of Mrs. Clara Smith, Murphy's sister.

Members of Murphy's party declared that Cornelius did not disclose his identity as an officer. He denies this charge.

MAN WANTED HERE IS HELD IN LONDON

Deputy Sheriff Kenneth C. Barr went to London Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of returning to this city a man named Sweeney wanted in connection with the ownership of an automobile and thirty-one gallons of corn liquor confiscated by Barr on the Jamestown Pike, four miles east of the city, last Friday night.

Sweeney's first name is not known to Sheriff Ohmer Tate. He was arrested in London on a charge of reckless driving, but the charge may be changed later.

Two men abandoned the automobile, with the motor running, in a private lane off the Jamestown Pike, when they were pursued by Deputy Sheriff Barr. The car was abandoned following a wild chase from a point on the Lucas Hill, through the city to the spot where the men deserted the machine and escaped in a corn field under cover of darkness.

Ownership of the car was determined through the license tag, which had been issued by the auditor of Madison County.

POSTPONE TRIAL

The trial of Elijah Allen, charged with illegal possession of liquor which was assigned for Tuesday morning in probate court, was continued until next Monday at 1 o'clock. Allen lives near Grape Grove. He is out of jail under bond.

COMMUNITY PICNIC IS IMMENSE SUCCESS; SAY 4,000 ATTENDED

Vieng with, if not outshining, any event of its kind held in Xenia, the Community Picnic staged at Shawnee Park Monday night, was a success from every point of view.

Varying estimates are made of the crowd attending the affair, but the majority agree that about 4,000 people spent the evening at the park.

Between 1,300 and 1,500 people ate their picnic suppers on the grounds and others came for the speaking and picnic program. Credit for the success of the affair is due in a large measure to Mrs. Charles A. Kelble, who conceived the idea of reviving the community gatherings and who obtained the earnest support of civic officials and organizations.

Five hundred and fifty-one dollars and five cents was the amount banked by the executive committee of the picnic Tuesday morning, as the proceeds of the event. More money is to come into the treasury from other organizations and Mrs. Kelble estimated that the amount, when all expenses are paid, will reach at least $500, far beyond the expectations of the committee. A meeting of the executive committee will be held Thursday or Friday for a final check-up of the money taken in. The total amount includes that taken in by Dr. E. A. Kerns' "Gopher Club."

Mrs. Kelble was unstinted in her praise for the co-operation that aided the picnic. "The reason the affair was a success was because of the unlimited co-operation of every organization in the city," she declared. She extended hearty thanks for the work of each civic body, particularly that of the Police Department in handling the large crowd.

The Community Picnic will be an annual event according to plans of this year's committee. Next year's picnic will be held on or around July 4, it is planned.

An elaborate organization was perfected days before the picnic which insured the entire program going off like clockwork. As the highlight on the program, the committee obtained the services of U. S. Senator S. D. Fess, Yellow Springs, who just returned from the Black Hills after several weeks spent at the summer home of President and Mrs. Coolidge, besides Dr. W. R. McClesney, president of Cedarville College, as speakers.

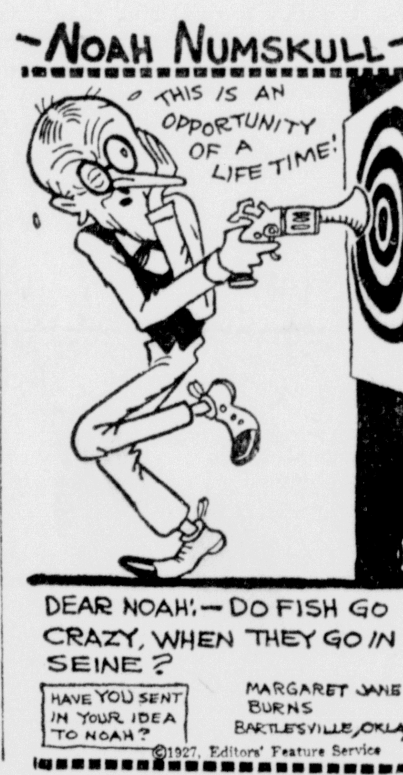

Senator Fess was escorted to Xenia by a committee composed of City Manager S. O. Hale, Mayor John W. Prugh, Dr. B. R. McClellan, Postmaster C. S. Frazer, H. Flynn, F. L. "Hoke" Smith and H. E. Rice. The party motored to the Fess home and accompanied the Senator to Xenia.

Xenia turned out in gala attire for the event, with flags flying before business houses during the day. The program proper began at 3 o'clock with games and contests for the children, in charge of Dr. A. C. Messenger, lasting until 5 o'clock. The Boy Scouts engaged in a tilting match on the park lagoon at 5 o'clock. Auto polo was played on Cox athletic field.

Music during the supper hour was furnished by the Ohio State Auto Insurance Broadcasting Orchestra, Columbus, which furnished a splendid program of popular music, with feature numbers.

Supper was served cafeteria style, from containers on tables at the park entrance. Picnickers grouped about tables and on the ground over the entire park and thoroughly entered into the spirit of the occasion.

Twenty-eight gallons of coffee were consumed by the picnickers, besides twelve gallons of butter-milk, six gallons of sweet milk

ERTLE WILL LOSE RIGHT ARM, SAID

William Ertle, 17, Lebanon, formerly of Xenia, who was seriously injured when the auto in which he was riding with two companions crashed through a bridge near Lebanon, early Sunday morning, will have his right arm amputated. He is at Dr. Blair's Hospital, Lebanon.

The young man's arm was crushed, his skull fractured, and he received internal injuries, when he was knocked out of the motor car and caught under the bridge wreckage. Little hope is held for his recovery.

His companions, David Campbell, 15 and Earl Branden, 19, also of Lebanon, were less seriously hurt.

PLAN FAREWELL FOR BAPTIST MINISTER

The Rev. R. E. Brown, who has been pastor of the First Baptist Church for the last five years, is severing his connection with the church next week, having resigned his pastorate some time ago.

A farewell reception for the Rev. and Mrs. Brown and their family will be given by the congregation at the church Friday evening, at 8 o'clock. Friends of the pastor and his family are invited.

PORT WILLIAM

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Gotherman and the latter's sister, Miss Reva Devoe were shopping in Dayton Wednesday.

Friends of Mr. Charley Miley will be glad to know that he is recovering nicely from his operation, he recently underwent at the McClellan Hospital in Xenia.

Connection of the Taylor families assembled at the Harley Devoes home near Enon on Sunday for the annual reunion. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Haworth and daughter, Miss Geneva of this place, were present.

Mr. William Faulkner who has been in poor health for some time, is not so well at this writing. Miss Corinne Murphy has returned to her home near Dayton after a visit with her relatives here the past two weeks.

A camping party composed of Donald Brakefield, Delbert Beal, Herschel Sanders, Lee Briggs and Clarence Sanders enjoyed a week's outing at "Rock Mills" returning home Saturday.

Guests in the Charlie Armintrout home for a few weeks are Mr. and Mrs. John Hartbarger, Miss Lola Hartbarger, Mrs. Dolly Smith and daughter, Marjorie of Clifton Forge, Virginia.

Miss Reva Devoe delightfully entertained her Sunday School class at her country home on Thursday afternoon, Miss Devoe being their teacher, the following little folks being present to enjoy the merits of the event: Virginia Earley, James Young, Jr., Elmore Sprowle, Wilbur Gerard, Jr., Rowena Barlow, Charles Turney, Jr., Ruthanna Sprowle, Herbert Southers, Mary Gotherman, Frank William, Johnson and Ruthanna Gotherman. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

BIBLE THOUGHT

MERCY'S UPLIFT.—When I said, my foot slippeth; Thy mercy, O Lord, help me up. Psalm 94:18.

NOT SO MUCH LUCK AFTER ALL

The myth of the "luck" of Lindbergh was short-lived. Its burial grows deeper as one by one the facts back of his historical adventure come to light. First it is discovered that the element of "luck" was eliminated by leaving not the tiniest detail of his remarkable flight to chance. So far as human foresight and engineering skill were adequate to the task, everything was planned and provided for.

Nor did the youthful flyer start off on his record-breaking hop trusting to luck that Paris would be sighted somewhere off there in the East. The month preceding the jump-off of "we" the young aviator spent in intensive study of navigation especially in the method of dead reckoning which it had been decided to use. He flew with his mind filled with sight pictures of special charts.

But these disclosures do not detract from his achievement nor from public estimation of that achievement. He is more than ever an idol of the people of the world and the patron saint of the romantic and adventurous.

His attitude and conduct since his memorable landing in Paris have had much to do with his canonization and continue popularity. Though feted, cheered and glorified, he remained a modest, good fellow.

Moving pictures of celebrations in his honor show him exhibiting undisguised irritation and disgust with fawning done over him by publicity-seeking "leading citizens." Nobody blame him for his show of some impatience.

NEED BRAINS AND COURAGE, TOO

The announcement of the intention of the American Federation of Teachers to work for a universal compulsory education law for all children under 18 years of age as a remedy for juvenile delinquency may be prevented by quantity rather than the quality of the instruction. It may be desirable that no child be permitted to end its schooling until the age specified, but adding a year or more to the compulsory age will not itself operate attain the end sought.

It is said that inadequately educated young persons are revealed to grow delinquent morally as well as in industrial and commercial advance, but by no means all of education is in the schools. But far the more valuable part is received in the home, if it be had at all. More schooling might help much but it would not do all desirable in diminishing delinquency. If the right kind of principles are inculcated even though schooling be ended before one is 18 there is very little peril of lapsing into delinquency.

The Way of the World

EXTRAVAGANT FOLKS

It costs the government so much more to make a dollar bill than it does to mint a silver dollar that we would save a million a year if we like silver dollars. But folks east of the Pacific coast want paper money, and they are not worrying about Uncle Sam's expenses.

THE PACE

Young women, doing with little sleep and to many social engagements, are shortening their lives, so the head of the Life Extension Institute tells us. The death rate of girls and women between the ages of 17 and 32 is greater than that of boys and men. It takes a rugged body and pretty thick nerves to stand the social pace these days.

THE BELIEVING MIND

Little more than a hundred years ago hard coal couldn't be sold. A man trying to sell some in the streets of Philadelphia was threatened with jail on the charge that he was selling rocks. Now it's a luxury and brings a high price. It doesn't speak very well for man that he has lived so many thousand years on the earth—and only yesterday learned some of the most obvious facts.

There are so many of us like the people who wouldn't buy hard coal, believing it to be rock. Some people are "easy." They believe everything they are told. Even at that, they'll contribute more to human progress, by far, than the narrow, tight-minded ones who won't open the doors of their heads to anything they can't understand.

HE FINISHED THE JOB

A section hand on a New York state railroad was called to a telephone to be told he had inherited a fortune of half a million dollars. Before leaving for New York city to see lawyers he went back to his pick and shovel and finished his day's work. Evidently he's the kind of man who deserves a fortune.

PAYING DEBTS

A man from Oregon came back to a Wisconsin town the other day to pay the county a debt. Twenty years ago the county took care of him when he was sick. In health and prosperity he has not forgotten.

Perhaps the most perfect test of character is the way in which a man regards his obligations.

Songs of a Housewife

UNANSWERABLE

Youngsters are canny, as they find Reasons for their acts. They often have an axe to grind When giving Mother "facts."

This morning, as they bathed their pup, Who seldom has a flea, They captured four that scrambled up, But two more burrowed free.

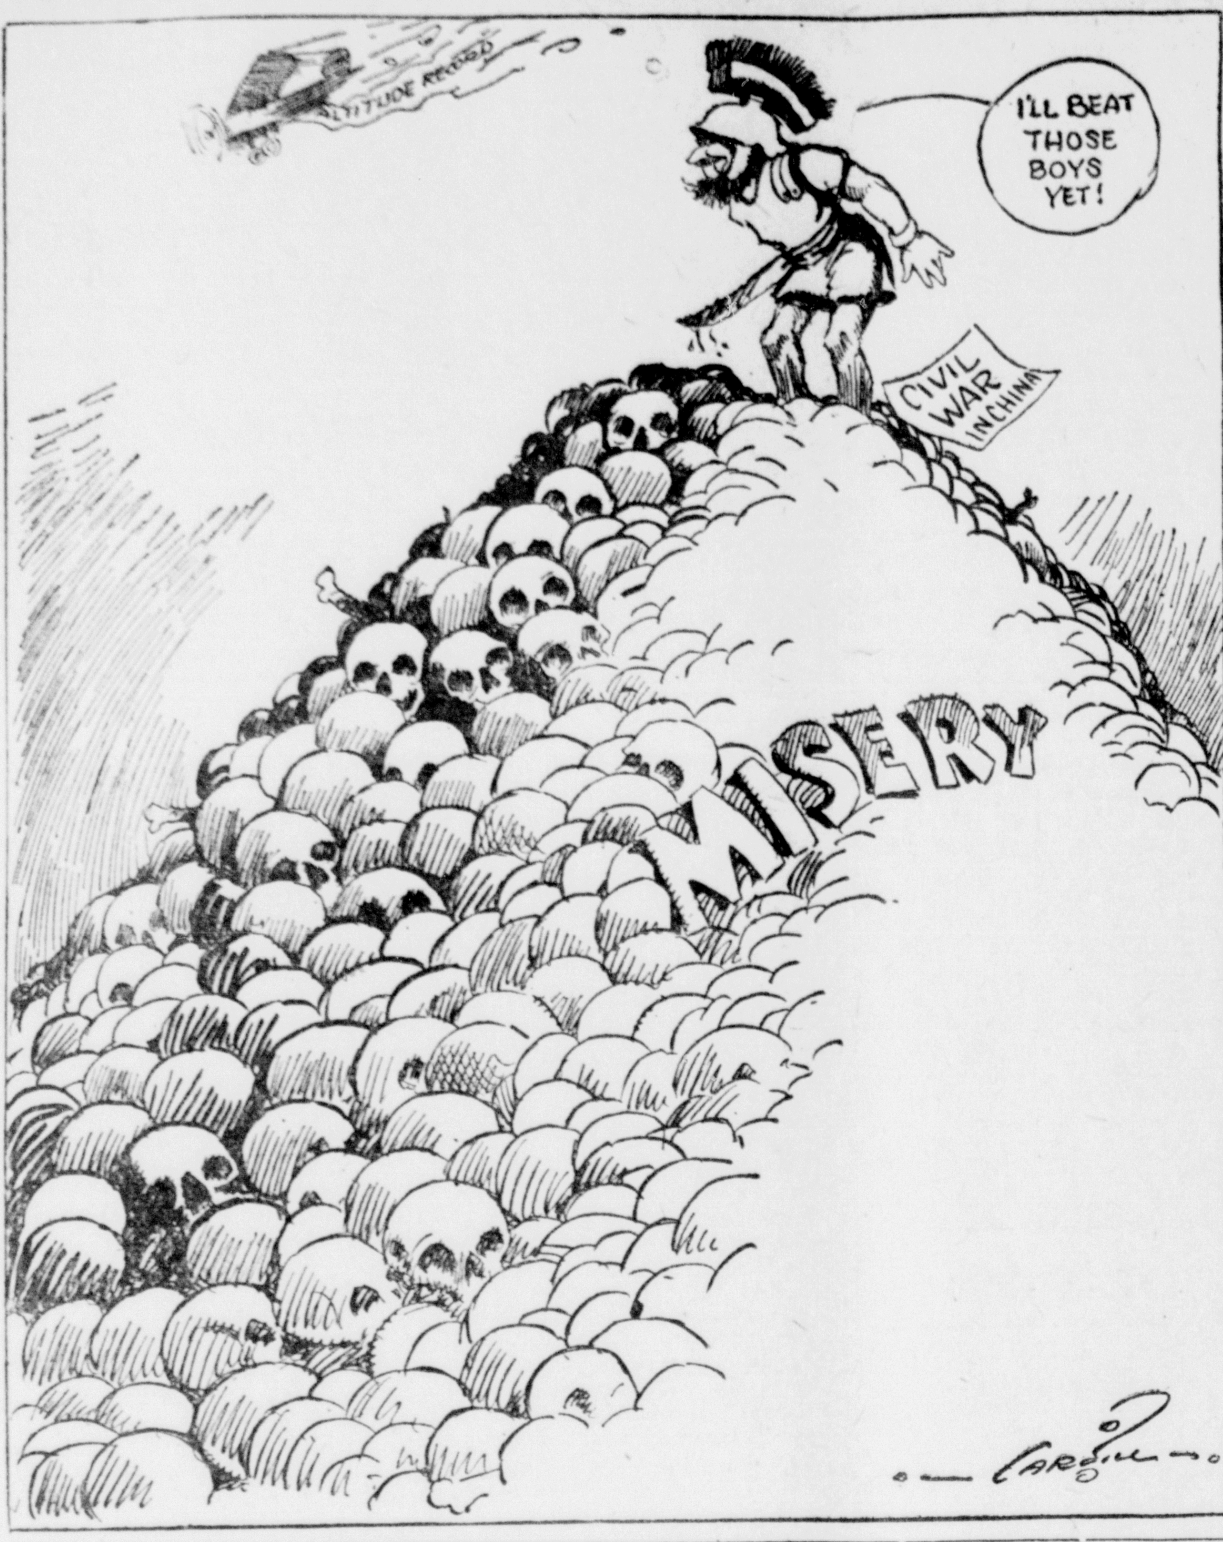

Tonight as they prepared to take Their pet with them to bed, "With fleas on him, it's a mistake To let him in," I said.

I put their answer up to you— It put me in a fix: "Why can't he sleep with us, with two— When last night he had six?"

MENU HINT

Cheese is a very good substitute for meat, as you probably know, and may be used freely in simplifying the meats for warmer weather. The menu printed here may be used for noon or night, as you wish.

Creamed Cottage Cheese
Cornmeal Biscuits
Combination Salad with Mint Dressing
Cookies Milk
Iced Loganberry Drink

TODAY'S RECIPES

Creamed Cottage Cheese—Into a quart of cottage cheese mix a block of cream pimento cheese with a cup of thick, sour cream.

Cornmeal Biscuit—Make an ordinary biscuit dough using one-third cornmeal instead of all flour.

Mint Dressing—This is nice on solid tomatoes. Mix a tablespoon of chopped mint leaves into a half cup mayonnaise before serving.

Hermits—One and one-half cups brown sugar, one-half cup butter, two eggs, three tablespoons sour milk, three cups flour, one teaspoon soda, one cup currants, one cup raisins, three-fourths cup nut meats, one tablespoon cinnamon and a little nutmeg. Drop by spoonfuls in greased pans.

Blanch—means to make white. In cooking it has two meanings. (1) to pour boiling water over, drain, rinse in cold water. This is used for rice, macaroni or spaghetti after cooking, and for vegetables before or after cooking. (2) For nuts. To remove the skin.

SUGGESTIONS

Saves Time and Steps. Time and steps may be saved by keeping a large aluminum salt shaker filled with flour, salt and pepper in a convenient place. This is very handy in making any of the dishes that require these three articles.

Green Casings. Painting window casings and gables of a gray cottage green is the suggestion of one who did. Moss green was the color used, and it was said that it blended nicely with the curtains and shades, eliminated the usual black sash tracing and produced a pleasing color contrast.

Safety First. Nail some pieces of rubber to the ends of the stepladder to prevent slipping.

APPLE SAUCE CAKE (Mrs. Mary Morton's Daily Tested Recipe.) One and one-half cups unsweetened applesauce, one cup light brown sugar, one-half cup melted butter, one cup chopped raisins, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-half teaspoon nutmeg, two teaspoons soda dissolved in a little cold water, two cups flour.

PASTOR WILL GIVE FAREWELL SERMON

Brown, who recently resigned as pastor of The First Baptist Church, will preach a farewell sermon to the people of Xenia at the regular union service next Sunday evening at the Trinity M. E. Church. He will take the place on the schedule of the Rev. C. O. Nybladh. The Rev. Mr. Nybladh will preach the following Sunday, taking the place of the Rev. W. H. Tilford.

Kellygrams

YOUR ACQUAINTANCE

Your acquaintance is almost the principal thing in life. If you do not believe this, stop and check up on yourself. Assuming that you have a good job, how did you get it? Wasn't it because somebody you knew recommended you, or told you about the opportunity? How did you happen to meet your wife, husband or sweetheart? Didn't some friend introduce you? If you hadn't been acquainted with that friend, would you have met the girl? At the end of any day in which you have accomplished things, look back and see if some friend or acquaintance didn't play an important part. If a man made a permanent acquaintance of every person to whom he is introduced, he would soon be surprised at the list of people he knows. Here is a little trick, by the way, about remembering faces: Take particular note of the ears. For they are the one feature that never changes. From childhood to old age, the ears, aside from growing larger, remain the same. I once asked a friend, famous for the number and variety of his acquaintances, how he does it. "My recipe is simple," he said. "I assume that nothing in the whole big world does so much to make a good impression on a stranger as everyday courtesy. If the man ahead of me at the ice-water tank insists on my drinking first, or hands me the little paper drinking cup he was about to use himself, I thank him. I don't merely grunt my thanks, as if I thought he had given me no more than I had coming to me. I thank him out loud, so that he can hear. And at the first opportunity I try to get even by doing some little favor for him. If I haven't a cigar to give him, I at least show that my heart is in the right place by offering him a match. "If a stranger comes to my office for a conference, I pull up a chair for him with my own hands. When he gets ready to go, I accompany him to the door. Thus his last recollection of me is of my courteously bowing him out. "If I meet a man on a train or elsewhere and he interests me enough to make a memorandum of his name, I usually follow this up a little later by sending him a postal card or a brief note. "Think what would happen if you yourself met a man on the train and then got a letter from him. You'd never forget him, would you?"

How to Achieve Beauty

A REGIME FOR YOUR BEAUTY'S NEW YEAR

Although it is not the first of January when all such things are supposed to be done, right now, at the beginning of the new season, is the time to make your beauty resolutions.

Take stock of your beauty assets and liabilities. Give a thought to the climate you live in and determine what effect it has on your skin and what treatment you need to counteract whatever detrimental results it might have. Resolve to carry the summer spirit through the year, to close the door to nerves so that you will keep yourself in the best mental condition to make the most of your beauty rites. Consider carefully your type and your age as determining factors of great importance when you choose your beauty regime. Then, whatever ties to a few carefully guarded minutes of every day to beauty. Each day this week I am going to discuss one of these factors that you must think about when you make your beauty resolutions.

Today, I shall talk about climate. What do you see in the women about you? Does their skin tend to be dried out and does it wrinkle easily? Do you see country skin become roughened when it is not cared for? Or do you see all about you women who reflect climate by being too relaxed in their minds, faces figures and movements? Climate has a very important effect on the amount of oil in your skin, and as I have often told you, I believe the most important element in treating your skin is to determine whether it is oily or dry. In my work all of my recommendations and treatments are based on this principle. So consider this very seriously when you plan your course of treatment for the new season.

You have very good examples of what climate does to skin in the various races. I have seen women come back to this country after several years in China, and invariably unless they have cared for their skins, they have a yellowish cast to their countenances.

There are places where one type of skin treatment is necessary, one sort of exercise or sport is best to keep the body in trim, one sort of diet beneficial, and others which have widely different demands. Take all this into consideration when you make your resolutions for your beauty's New Year.

My Dear Followers:

When sending for material which we offer you, please remember to enclose a STAMPED, SELF-ADDRESSED envelope bearing your full name and address. The pamphlet on educating and gaining is the only one for which you must enclose TEN cents in stamps extra. Address your letters to me in care of this paper. Make them as brief as possible, NOT OVER 200 WORDS, and type or write them legibly with ink. Please sign your name as evidence of good faith—we will not use it in any way. Remember it is impossible for me to diagnose for you or to answer you personally. I appreciate very much the beautiful letters you send me and regret it is impossible to give you individual advice. The questions you ask will be answered in the column as soon as possible, if they are of general interest. Don't forget the STAMPED, SELF-ADDRESSED ENVELOPE if you expect me to send you the information I have offered.—Lulu Hunt Peters.

NOTES ON THE TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS

Can you be cured if you have tuberculosis? Yes, most certainly, if you have not delayed your treatment too long. And you must remember the healing comes only after a long period of proper care. Proper care of a person suffering from tuberculosis should be outlined by a physician who has specialized in that disease. Tuberculosis is not a case for home treatment, except under the scientific supervision of a specialist.

The so-called "sanatoriums" who advertise in the daily papers and attempt to reach the layman, are not the ones to choose, for reputable physicians do not advertise. Of the factors that go to cure tuberculosis, rest, fresh air and an adequate and suitable diet stand highest. The medication is secondary.

Fresh Air and Climates. Pottinger, in his book, "Tuberculosis and How to Combat It," writing of fresh air, states: "Individuals who live in badly ventilated rooms with their bodies surrounded by stale air, lack nerve and mental stability as well as physical tone. They fail to digest and assimilate their food properly, and consequently suffer from low state of vitality. . . . Therefore, open air should surround the patient with tuberculosis for a large portion of each day, if his reacting powers are sufficient to stand it; if they are not, he should be sheltered somewhat, but still be supplied with moving air. . . . He must be prepared for it by suitable clothing, hot bottles and other devices, and should be subjected to the more stimulating conditions gradually. . . ."

Webb and Ryder state that it appears many patients do better in very mild climates and equable ones. This is a comfort to those who cannot go to Florida, Colorado or California. However, they state that it is clearly an advantage to be where outdoor life is agreeable at all seasons; but that if you cannot do this with an open fire and open windows you can make a Florida or Colorado or California at home. You must as far as possible, accustom yourself to be out of doors in all weather, and make a study of the means of keeping yourself comfortable.

Rest and Exercise. Pottinger says: "When tuberculosis is active, it is my opinion that any patient will increase his chances of obtaining a favorable result by the employment of rest. The loss of muscular energy, which follows the adoption of the rest, will rapidly disappear when the proper time for exercise has come." (Rest implies mental as well as physical repose.)

Diet. "Three square meals a day, with plenty of water," is the way Webb and Ryder sum up the diet for tuberculosis. Pottinger states that one of the most rational changes in the treatment is the discarding of overfeeding. However, this does not mean that the tubercular patient is going to be on a starvation diet which he usually prefers (because one of the symptoms of tuberculosis is loss of appetite.)

The diet in tuberculosis does not differ materially from the diet to maintain health (with the exception that most liberal quantities of fat are allowed). Milk, eggs, cream and cod liver oil have always been emphasized in the diet, and in the light of our newer knowledge of nutrition, our confidence has not been misplaced in these foods. They are all high in the fat soluble vitamin A, and as I told you yesterday, the lack of vitamin A is now considered a vital factor in lowering resistance, especially to tuberculosis. Cod liver oil is richer in vitamin A than any other substance, containing very much more than butter. Egg yolk is high in iron as well as vitamin A, and the milk is high in lime, both these minerals being highly essential in normal health, and doubly essential in tuberculosis.

As to the total amount of food taken, Pottinger states that the desirable amount is the least which is consistent with regaining and maintaining what is the patient's best weight in health. It is important that the patient have at least one good evacuation of the bowels, and preferably two a day. This is important for anyone, as we know. We have an article on Balanced Diet and Constipation, also a list of books on tuberculosis, written for the layman, that may help you. Tomorrow—We'll sue him for damages!

I Have Said in My Heart

By IDAH M'GLONE GIBSON

YOUTH

"The more I see of girls, the stronger I am in the conclusion that youth is not the happiest age of human beings."

I said this to a girl recently who was telling me some trouble that seemed absolutely trivial to me, but which I could see was a tragedy to her.

It takes a little while to get the right perspective. I remember an old man telling me once that he never answered a letter until six months after he had received it and then as a rule he found that there was nothing in it that needed answering.

It is about the same with the sorrows and troubles of the young. Some young girl thinks she is going to die of grief because the boy who has been attentive to her has suddenly grown tired of their youthful companionship and left her for some one of her friends. She does not know that every woman of thirty is apt to recite her first love with laughter.

If we all married our first sweethearts, I am afraid there would be more divorces than there are now.

I met a girl the other day who was blindly in love with a chap. A few months ago, business took him to another town and for a few weeks Uncle Sam's postbags were bulging with his letters. Then all at once there were none. Did she weep—not so that anyone knew it. Instead she plunged into her music which before this had been something with which to pass away time between his visits and his letters.

The result is that this young woman shows great promise of a professional career as a pianist and she is much happier than when all her hopes were centered around a rather fickle lover.

It took her quite a while to find this out and it has left her a little hard, but I am not so sure that we call hardness is not a good basis upon which to build a contented life.

"I am never again going to care enough for anyone that I can be hurt by what he does," she said to me.

She could not help this if she had not her work, which she loves, to compensate her. True, something goes out of one's life when one's first lover is found wanting, but a peach may be good eating even if the bloom has been brushed off.

Memos—Work is the most lasting joy of life and one can find it quite as many thrills as in love if one looks for them.

Living and Loving

BY MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

BLIND LOVE

I found out differently by her talk. "I haven't been going with any other fellow but him, Mrs. Lee, do you think I am to blame or did I do right? Should he apologize or I?"

BROKEN HEARTED. "I certainly think the apology should come from him. Broken hearted, as he deceived you both about the girl and about drinking. It was perfectly natural to tell him what you thought of such proceedings, and like the little boy who knows he has done wrong, he 'went off mad.'"

And another little girl who wants her "boy friend" back writes: "Dear Mrs. Lee: I am 18 and a senior at high school. A year ago I met a boy from college and went out with him a couple of times. I thought he liked me, but somehow he doesn't pay much attention to me, and I care lots for him. What shall I do?"

Nothing, I'm afraid, Pat, dear, except be jolly and friendly when you meet him and let him see that you like him if you can without being "cuddly." . . .

Spoons are used in eating grapefruit and other fruits served with cream. Jellies, puddings, custards, porridges, preserves and boiled eggs are always eaten with spoons.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Primarily for the purpose of giving the city an adequate water supply, Aaron Burr and a group of prominent citizens organized the Bank of the Manhattan Company. This was in 1799, at which time the bank was located at 40 Wall St. Four years later, The Merchants Bank was opened to business at 42 Wall St. under the leadership of Alexander Hamilton. The very next year, 1804, Burr killed Hamilton in their historic duel on the Elysian fields. These facts are in every history.

But it is not so generally known that in 1833, the banks founded by these rivals jointly built a single building at numbers 40 and 42 Wall St. in which both were established. A marble wall separated the two houses. Moreover, in 1920, the partition was torn down and the banks consolidated. And New Yorkers pass daily what is now known as The Bank of the Manhattan Company, never realizing that it is the result of the labors of two men whose former enmity is one of the outstanding episodes in American history.

For forty years there has been a small jeweler's store on Waverly place. The shop is now conducted by two little old bent men, whose long service in their trade is evidenced by the fact that they flatly refuse to do any sort of repair work on wrist watches. They regard these as new-fangled nonsense and refuse to lower themselves in dallying with such frivolous baubles. . . .

A woman from out of town had a friend from a Long Island suburb visiting her in town. After the theater, the hostess, by some heavy persuasion, induced a hack-driver to take them out to Long Island. And this is by no means an easy thing to do. After the long ride out from and back to town, the woman paid the fare and tipped the driver. Still her conscience troubled her. She felt that perhaps she had not tipped the man sufficiently. So she dove down into her bag and produced a silver flask. The driver took it calmly, guzzled a hearty draught; then shook his head as if to clear his brain. His eyes watered and he coughed. But always polite, he wiped the mouth of the flask on his sleeve and handed it back. "No Ma'am," he remarked "that's no drink for a lady!"

A young woman standing in front of a theater during an intermission was garbed in a pale pink dress, cut very low in the back. This frankly and generously posed exposure was evenly tanned a deep brown. Evidently she had either been bathing in natural or else dousing herself with henna, for there were no tell-tale white lines of shoulder straps. The lady wore stockings which were flesh-colored—tan, to match her back. Moreover, as she stood there, talking to her escort, she constantly

DEALERS WILL ENTER AUTOS IN RACE ON LABOR DAY PROGRAM

Many local automobile dealers will enter stock cars stripped down for racing in the race for Greene County cars and drivers only in connection with the automobile races at the Greene County Fairgrounds Labor Day.

Friendly rivalry between the car dealers will make the event of unusual interest and the race should settle the frequent disputes that arise over the comparative speed merits of various pleasure cars sold here.

Indications are that dealers will strip down stock models, taking off bodies and fenders, and settle this one argument on the track. Some of these dealers will drive their own cars. A special cup has been offered for the winner of the event.

The event will be but one of six races scheduled for the day and will add a touch of local color and interest to the program which is expected to draw a number of professional dirt track performers to Xenia for the holiday.

There is also considerable possibility that several local drivers will compete in the other speed events.

INTERESTING SPORTS PROGRAM STAGED AT COMMUNITY PICNIC

Under the direction of Harper C. Pendry, chairman, John C. Ballantyne, and Miss Olive H. Huston, the afternoon's program of sports and games at the Community Picnic was a great success. Hundreds of boys and girls between the ages of eight and fifteen spent a most enjoyable and, to the winners, profitable afternoon.

Beginning at three o'clock the events were run off without mishap and ended at six thirty with the final tilting match. While these contests were taking place several auto polo games also were being played in the field east of the lake. These games were put on through the courtesy of the Xenia Auto Polo Club.

The girls events were run off in rapid order with Miss Huston in charge. The thirty yard dash was won by Margaret Tindell. In the fifty yard dash for girls between eight and twelve, Rose Marie Hornick and Betty Baldwin were winners. Lillian Jenks and Francis Williamson won the fifty yard dash for girls between the ages of twelve and fifteen. The baseball throw was won by Leona Middleton. Two novelty events, a potato race and a clothespin race, were won by Evelyn Jay and Betty Baldwin respectively.

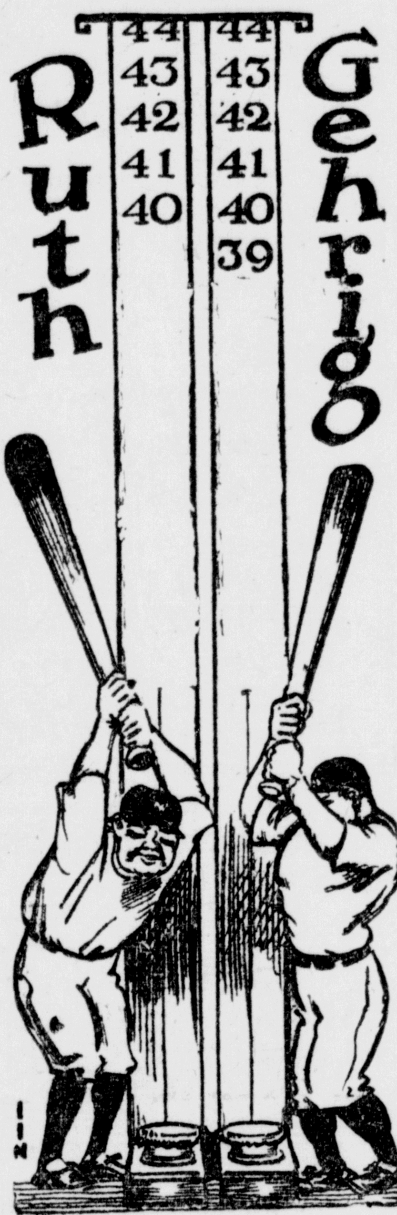

Ralph Baldwin walked away with four first prizes in the contests for boys between the ages of eight and twelve, taking both the fifty and the hundred yard dashes and the standing and running broad jumps. Culver Dawson took three second places in these events and Leo Foley won the other. Morris Oxley proved to be quite a sprinter when he easily won the hundred and fifty yard dash for boys between twelve and fifteen. Baldwin was second in the hundred while Bob Chew did the same in the fifty. The other two events for boys of this age were won by Charles Zell, who took the running broad and running high jump. John Downey and Lewis Hutsler won first and second prizes respectively in the thirty yard dash for boys under eight.

The first tilting match of the evening began at five thirty and finally resulted in a win for the team representing Troop 2 of the Boy Scouts. The loser in this match was the Troop 1 entrant with scouts Price and Hyman as participants. The winning canoe held Charles Zell and and Bob Adair. The final score was 24 to 7.

The second of these matches resulted in another victory for the Troop 2 team and earned for them the Bryant Motor Sales Co. prize. Zell and Adair had for their opponents this time, Edward Sayre and Harry Cross. The final score of this match was 36 to 6.

Prizes for all events were donated by Xenia Merchants.

RESERVES WILL OPEN SERIES WITH XENIA MERCHANTS SUNDAY

Xenia Reserves will play the Xenia Merchants next Sunday at Washington Park.

The announcement brings up memories of other interesting series between the Reserves and Merchants when the city championship title was hotly disputed by these teams.

This year the Merchants were not reorganized and have not been performing but for the purpose of keeping alive the old rivalry and interest that marked the games in the past, they will revive the old team for the game Sunday.

Ranks of the nine will be recruited from among star colored players in Detroit, Dayton and other cities, it is announced.

If the team is strong enough to make an interesting argument with the Reserves the games will be run into a series and if not, the Merchants will bring the Indianapolis A. B. C.'s here to meet the Reserves.

GREENE COUNTIANS SHOOTING IN GRAND AMERICAN TOURNEY

Four perfect scores were turned in Monday at the opening of the Grand American tournament of the Amateur Trapshooting Association at Vandalla.

Guy E. Dering, president of the association, a Class B shooter, turned in a perfect score on 200 targets. Others who broke 200 without a miss were: Paul R. Earle, Class AA, of Starr, S. C.; Allen Heid, Class A, Allentown, Pa.; and H. J. Pendergast, Phoenix, N. Y.

Several Greene County marksmen got good starts in the opening of the shoot. B. J. Leveck, Class A, broke 194 birds. Dick Denison, Yellow Springs, G. R. Spahr, Jamestown and Ward Sharp, Jamestown, all Class B, broke 189, 186 and 186 respectively. L. T. Shaner, Cedarville, broke 182 in Class B. Oscar Swigart, Xenia, Class D, scored 183 and John Cyphers, Xenia, in Class C, scored 176.

GOLFERS WILL PLAY WILMINGTON CLUB

Xenia Country Club Golfers will go to Wilmington Wednesday to meet Snow Hill Country Club players in an inter-city match.

Twenty-two Xenia golfers will make the trip, it is believed, and they are urged to arrive early as the players will tee off at 1 o'clock.

Snow Hill Club members will be hosts to the visiting players at dinner at the club house at the conclusion of play.

KLAN ATTEMPTS TO REVIVE OHIO ORDER

TOLEDO, O., August 23.—Thousands of Klansmen are gathering here for a Klan celebration beginning today and ending Saturday.

Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan will be here to talk. George E. Carr, grand dragon of the realm of Michigan, also will be on the program. A parade, airplane stunts, drum corps exhibitions and other entertainments will be provided, according to posters displayed about the city. The rally is under the auspices of Commodore Perry Klan, Ohio 174.

Politically the meeting is claimed to have some significance, in as much as efforts are being made to revive the order throughout the state.

ADDED MORE LAURELS TO THE WRIGHT FAMILY BY HIS TWO VICTORIES IN THE CANADIAN SCULLING RACES

Nominating Joe Wright, Jr. Because he's a chip off the old Wright rowing block.

Because he has just added new laurels to the family by his two victories in the Canadian sculling races.

Because he won the singles title of the Dominion by defeating Frank Adams of Vancouver in the finals.

Because he turned back W. E. Garrett Gilmore, of Philadelphia, in the quarter-mile event, to make the other victory more impressive.

And because his showing gives him hope of capturing the British Diamond sculls event the next time it is held. He rowed his way to the final in the last one.

W. L. Moore, of Dayton, was fined $15 and costs on a charge of reckless driving by Probate Judge S. C. Wright Monday. He pleaded guilty. Moore, who is employed at Wright Field, was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Kenneth Barr, county road patrolman, near the aviation field last Friday.

Peter's Adventures

THE HOUSE ON HIS BACK
"Into what house?" asked Peter, who had listened carefully to the fellow but couldn't make out what he was talking about.
"How could any one go indoors and leave his head and feet outside. You must be crazy! And do stop drawing in yours and poking them on again. You make me ed wrong. I told you that you were a Turtle a few moments ago, now you say you're not!" Peter was growing more puzzled all the while. The voice of the box chuckled again.

"Then you told me something that neither I nor any of my family know," said he. "I am not talking about myself now at all but about some of my relatives. Listen, Boy, and don't interrupt. It's rude, and besides one never learns anything when one uses one's mouth instead of one's ears and eyes. Cousin Turtle doesn't take his head and feet into the house with him because he can't—a perfectly good reason, and one with which every one should be satisfied. But then, you see, he can dive into deep water whenever he hears the footfall of an enemy. As for me, since I am no coward and will not run from danger, belong to the land and cannot take to the water, the next best thing is to hide myself in my hard shell. I am in little peril when I have pulled myself in and drawn the door closed after me, that makes me proud to be a Box Tortoise. There, now! I have told you my right name and I was going to make you guess again!"

Next—Snakey's Three First Cousins.

WIFE PRESERVERS

The strange creature made a sound that sounded more like a sneeze than anything else.
"Which question shall I answer first?" asked he, and twisted his neck to grin up at the Boy. Peter didn't like to be teased and he spoke sharply.
"The first of course."
"Well, then, the house on their backs," declared the fellow. "And the reason you think nobody can go indoors and leave out his head and feet is because you don't know anything at all about the Turtle family!"

RADICALS DIE WHEN FINAL EFFORTS FOR RESPITE ARE FUTILE

lay quietly and waited for death. Not so Sacco. Younger, more volatile and impetuous, his first cry upon entering the death chamber was, "Long live anarchy!" and his last, "farewell, my mother."

Preceding them to the chair was Celestino Madeiros, a Portuguese bank bandit, who killed a cashier in Wrentham while in the act of holding up the place. Oddly enough, Madeiros had confessed to the same murder for which Sacco and Vanzetti were executed and his confession exonerated the two radicals. But the law of Massachusetts refused to believe him.

Phlegmatic and sullen, seemingly indifferent to his fate, Madeiros had eaten everything that came his way during his long stay in the death house. He had eaten and slept the long days and nights away. He even had to be awakened three hours before his execution to be informed that this was his last night on earth. And having heard it, he turned over and was asleep again in five minutes. He marched stolidly to the chair and did a without a murmur. Nobody rioted or tossed bombs in his behalf.

The scene at Charlestown prison probably was without parallel in American criminalology. Eight hundred police and state police, armed with riot guns, riot clubs and 45 automatics encircled the old prison in a ring of steel.

Backing them up were machine guns mounted atop the walls. Powerful searchlights sprayed the adjacent streets to seek out possible trouble. For four blocks around the prison the streets were roped off, and nobody was permitted to enter without a pass signed by a police permit.

Just off the main gate a temporary press room had been established with special wires leading to many cities, and in this restricted space three score perspiring reporters and telegraphers labored to inform the world as to how Sacco and Vanzetti died. The flash of their successive deaths was bulleted in London, Paris and other world capitals almost as soon as it was in New York and Chicago.

Several miles away, in a closely guarded office on the third floor of the capitol, sat Governor Alvan T. Fuller, whose official duties for more than a month past have been largely confined to this world-famous case. Grim-faced and resolute, the governor remained at his desk until thirteen minutes past midnight. At that hour Madeiros was dead and Sacco was on his last short march to earthly oblivion.

Governor Fuller heard all last minute pleas for respite from relatives of the condemned men, from their attorneys and their friends and to them all he was courteous and adamant.

Governor Fuller's friends said that the reason he remained at his desk was that he would not have it said he "ran away" from any last minute appeals. Some said, too, that the governor anticipated possible personal reprisals from sympathizers with the executed men, and if it came he preferred to meet it where his wife and children would not be subjected to danger. But the trouble failed to materialize. The city was policed down to the last alley, and when the governor left, heavily guarded, he motored to his summer home at Rye Beach, N. H.

The battle to save the two Italians continued right up to the foot of the chair itself. Throughout the day frantic appeals were made to this judge and that judge for stays, but all in vain. Not a single stay-giving authority was overlooked by the array of lawyers. Airplanes, motor speed boats and fast automobiles were used to circumvent time and distance, but all proved unavailing.

Only an hour before the executions, final dramatic pleas were made by Mrs. Sacco and Miss Vanzetti to Governor Fuller for mercy. Half an hour before the march to the death chamber began, Attorney Michael A. Musmanno made an ardent plea to the same authority. One minute before midnight, Francis Fisher Kane, another of their attorneys emerged from the governor's office unsuccessful. Before Kane left the capitol Madeiros was in the chair.

Beside himself with grief, Musmanno rushed to the prison and demanded a final interview with the prisoners. Warden Hendry told him it was too late. Musmanno pleaded, "Tell me," said the warden, "and I will carry the message to them."

"I want to tell them," said the little attorney passionately, "that there is more mercy in their hearts than in the hearts of many who profess the orthodox religion."

"I want to tell them I know of their innocence and all the electric chairs and gallows in the world cannot alter that knowledge. I want to tell them that they are the two kindest and tenderest men I ever knew, that they have loved their brother men with a sincerity that has always been apparent."

He would have said more, but the warden stopped him. It was no use. The hour was too close at hand.

It was about this time that the Rev. Father Murphy, the rotund Catholic chaplain of the prison, gave up the ghost. For months he has labored with the three men, striving to return them to the faith of their fathers and of their childhood. But they would have none of it. He paid three visits to the men during the day, advising them of the church's willingness to sponsor them into what lay beyond the chair. Each time he met with the same indifference. They went out as they had lived—beyond the pale of the church.

Even though the bodies of Sacco and Vanzetti lay stiff and stark on the marble slabs of the Northern mortuary today, the Boston police force was not demobilized. If anything, it was more alert.

Plans are afoot for a gigantic march "in memoriam" through the streets of Boston by sympathizers with the dead men and there are always the rumors of reprisals.

Not for several days at least will the vigilantes of Boston's police be relaxed in the slightest.

In a few days, Luigi Vanzetti, elderly sister of Bartolomeo, will place his body aboard an Italian boat and accompany it back to the homeland for interment in his native soil. Her week in America has been a tragic one. She arrived, bewildered and alone, a week ago, unfamiliar with the language or the law of the country that has taken her brothers' life.

Sacco's body will be buried near Boston.

Today several Boston papers printed editorials urging that the city "get back to normalcy."

READ THIS FIRST!

SALLY JEROME, pretty and clever, is the mainstay of her family in the absence of her father, who does not live with her mother. MRS. JEROME enjoys poor health, so Sally does the housework mornings and afternoon for Mr. PEEVEY, a tough old fellow. Her brother, BEAT, and sister, MILLIE, give little towards the support of the home, and the financial burden falls heavily upon Sally.

In the flat below the Jeromes lives TED SLOAN, who wants Sally to marry him and keep on working. But the only man who interests her is JOHN NYE, whose real estate office is across the hall from Mr. Peevey's. Nye hires Millie as his secretary and becomes blindly infatuated with her. Millie flirts with the notion of marrying him, but really prefers DAVIDSON, a bond salesman whom she met in a former job.

Beau passes some bad checks, and "horrible" some money from the bank where he works. Sally gets the money to make good his theft from Mr. Peevey, who is retiring from business because of ill health. Beau and his bride, MABEL, having spent all their earnings for such luxuries as second-hand cars and fur coats, return home to live. They pay almost no board, and Sally is frantic.

Then Millie has an appendicitis operation, and John Nye pays for her room and nurse at the hospital. While she is there Sally does her work in Nye's office, and he offers her a permanent position. She refuses it, and goes into the restaurant business with her aunt, EMILY JEROME, who has turned her country home into a roadside inn. The business does not thrive and Sally spends most of her time at the inn, where she and Aunt Emily do all the work of cooking, serving, etc. Mrs. Jerome decides to bring the whole family there to live, and despite Aunt Emily's protests, does. She says she can't get along without Sally to look after her. Aunt Emily hires a jazz band and tries to compete with "The Lark," a nearby roadhouse. But business is no better. One Sunday afternoon John Nye drops in and tells Sally that if she and her aunt go out of business he would like her to work for him again.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER XLIV

"I DIDN'T come out here to sing the blues," John said, with a serious half-smile. "But when Millie said your business wasn't as good as you expected it to be, I had an idea you might start work again. And this time I didn't want to lose you, so I thought I'd get my offer in first."

"Offer?" echoed Sally, flushed and wide-eyed above the lilac dress that brought out the beauty of her deep blue eyes.

John nodded. "I'd start you out at $150 a month in my office," he answered quietly, and Sally shook her head.

"No. I'll stick to this until it falls or until we make a go of it," she said firmly. She looked squarely at John Nye, and his eyes held hers like a magnet.

It was at this moment that an unseen door slammed somewhere in the back of the house, and shuffling steps came slowly across the wide hall.

Mrs. Jerome stood in the doorway, her arms full of Sunday papers and magazines, her large form encased in the tight gray silk dress that she wore on Sunday afternoons. A tell-tale cake crumb was in one corner of her mouth.

She frowned at Sally, shook her head, and then gave John the most beaming smile Sally had ever seen upon her face.

"Oh, Mr. Nye!" she twittered. "I'll tell Millie you're here! And with another frown at Sally she turned and went padding upstairs.

In a moment her voice came floating down from the upper floor. "Sally! Sally! I want you!"

Sally was standing in the middle of the hall when Sally ran up to her, still holding her papers clasped to her bosom.

"Millie wants you to powder her neck and back for her," she said, and followed Sally into the middle bedroom where Millie held forth among her perfume bottles and boudoir pillows. Millie's room always looked like a cross between a junk shop and a fancy powder box.

She was sitting up in bed, yawning and blinking now.

"What did you mean me up for?" she demanded of her mother. "I was up so late last night—"

"I told you Mr. Nye is down stairs!" said Mrs. Jerome, importantly. She said it in the same awed voice in which she might have announced that the Archangel Gabriel had come to pay them all a visit.

Then she turned upon Sally. "You might have told your sister that Mr. Nye was here!" she said severely. "You knew he was here to see her and not you, Sally! I declare, you're getting to be more like your Aunt Em every day of your life. Just taking the law into your own hands about everything—"

"Mother, I told him I'd call Millie, and he said to wait for me!" Sally broke in, indignantly. "He offered me a position in his office."

Mrs. Jerome let out a sniff that would have done credit to Aunt Emily. "Well, that's a very queer thing!" said she, "for a man to come away out here in the country to offer you a job. . . . I wouldn't trust these rich young men too far, if I were you, girls. They don't have any honorable intentions towards you, make sure of that."

"Oh, Mother!" giggled Millie. "I've been running around with John Nye for months, and he's as harmless as a fly. You make me laugh!"

Mrs. Jerome managed to look wiser than she was. "He may be as harmless as a fly, but I notice he's too clever for you, Millie."

Millie flushed. "What do you mean?"

"Why, you've been saying that he'd marry you in a minute if he could," explained her mother, her eyes narrowed above her fat cheeks. "But you know that isn't the truth! You know you telephoned him yourself the other night and asked him to take you for a drive. It's you who's been doing the chasing lately."

Millie flushed even more deeply. "Oh, he's just peevish at me because Dave Davidson came up into the office to see me a few times," she answered, sulkily, swinging her bare little feet over the side of the bed.

"Go on downstairs, Sally, and ask him to stay for supper," she said to her sister. "Set a table for him and me in the little dining room."

When Sally went down stairs John Nye was standing in the little reception room, looking at Aunt Emily's collection of Toby jugs and Bristol glass.

"Beautiful old stuff," he remarked as he turned away from it. "I like to see you here in this old house. You belong here—not in an office."

If lightning had struck Sally she could not have been more speechless than she was for fully five minutes after he had said that.

With a dazed little smile she left him standing alone in the room, where the fragrance of the lilacs outside made the air sweet, and the leafy trees made green gloom.

A minute or two later, as she passed the door with a big tray in her hands, she saw him still standing there, looking down into the green garden. He was so deep in thought that he did not even to the door of the room where she was setting a little table. "Well, I must be off," he said. He was holding out his right hand and he had his hat in the other.

"Oh, no!" she cried. "I forgot. Millie told me to ask you to stay to supper. Please do. I want to show you how well I can cook. After those terrible drug store sandwiches that I used to bring you, I think I owe you something decent to eat."

His face was serious. "I never enjoyed anything more than those sandwiches," he said quietly. "It was those sandwiches—and all the other nice things that you did for me—that brought me here today. You made my work a lot easier down town than it ever was before, or than it has been since. I miss you."

Again came that foolish impulse of Sally's to cry. She struggled with it, but she could feel the warm tears in the back of her throat and in her eyes.

"Hey, you, Sally!" called a loud voice in the outer room, and she gave a start.

It was Ted Sloan's voice, and suddenly she remembered that he had been threatening all week to come out for Sunday night supper.

In an instant he was at the door, and she was there again, holding out her hand in welcome and smiling at his swift, bright smile.

"Hello, Ted!" she cried warmly. But Ted did not answer her or touch the hand she held out to him.

A look of jealousy and distrust flashed into his eyes as he looked from her to John Nye, together there in the seclusion of the little private dining room, not 13 inches apart from each other.

"Hul-lo, Nye!" he said without a smile. And then he leaned towards Sally, and without warning, kissed her upon her mouth.

"Hello, Babe!" he said to her, but his gaze never left John Nye's face. "See, that's how things are between us!" was what that steady gaze seemed to say, more plainly than any words could have said. And she, standing looking at him.

There was nothing she could do or say. . . . She couldn't cry out to John Nye, and tell him that she didn't care a snap of her fingers for Ted Sloan, and that she hated him pointed out the burdens of the presidency and the self-sacrifices any incumbent must make.

Coolidge Anecdotes

From the wealth of personal information Senator Fess has acquired about the president, he told intimacies of the president's life. Answering the accusation that President Coolidge has no sense of humor, Dr. Fess told an amusing story that the president had told him on one occasion and repeated the answer the president gave Allen Treadwell, his personal friend, when the latter admitted he had a photograph of Coolidge as vice president but wished a new one of him as president. "Why Allen, I'm using the same face," was the president's retort.

Senator Fess said the president was absolutely silent when he attempted to discuss with him the appointment of a governor general of the Philippines and was nearly so when he mentioned the vacant ambassadorship to Mexico. At that time President Coolidge pointed out that the Mexico City portfolio was the most delicate point in the diplomatic service, Senator Fess said.

Tribute to First Lady

"Much of the success of President Coolidge is due to his wife—Mrs. Grace Coolidge," said Senator Fess. "I don't know of any personality more gracious. I have seen her meet 1,000 people in a night and give each a fresh smile. I'm sure there has never been any one more gracious than she in the White House."

Senator Fess closed by pointing out the enormous advantages of this country in comparison with anyone in the White House. "My mind is made up," he added.

Possibility of Draft

Senator Fess told his listeners that he pointed out to President Coolidge that while his statement takes him out as far as being a candidate is concerned, that the party would eventually fall back upon him. The speaker said that he told President Coolidge that a dozen candidates from as many states would divide the early convention votes and that the convention would eventually deadlock, possibly over such candidates as Hughes, Dawes, Hoover and Lowden. Then, Senator Fess predicted, there will be a universal turning to the President with the result that he will be unanimously nominated and the convention will recess until his acceptance is given. "And for Heaven's sake don't turn it down," Senator Fess said he told the President.

"I'm happy to hear these laudatory statements about myself, yet there isn't any possibility of what my friends have put in your mind," said the speaker. "If I thought anything like it was to take place, I'd be the most unhappy person here tonight." He

His only reference to the Sacco-Vanzetti case was indirect, when he said that while he believes in the freedom of speech and of the press, he is unalterably opposed to aliens meeting to assault the American government and the principle on which this country is founded.

The celebration took on the nature of a dedication for Shawnee Park as speakers extolled its virtues and advantages. City Manager S. O. McChesney Heard Community singing led by Mayor John W. Prugh followed and Miss Zeila Soward sang a solo honoring Mrs. Charles A. Kelbie.

City Manager Hale introduced State Senator L. T. Marshall who presented the first speaker, Dr. W. R. McChesney, president of Cedarville College. Dr. McChesney complimented the assemblage and the new park and P. H. Flynn, whose gift of the acreage made the development possible. Both Dr. McChesney and Mayor Prugh, who followed him and introduced Senator Fess, spoke of the new senator as the "next president."

During an intermission in the speaking program the Cadet Band from the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home played one number and after the speaking program concluded, the Xenia Municipal Band followed with a concert.

"T'WILL BE CAL"

"My judgment is that the next President—the next man to lead the party—is the man who is now President," Senator Simeon D. ## ABANDON HOPE FOR MISSING OCEAN PILOTS

Week Passes Since Dole
Flyers Lost—No
Crews Found

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23.—Hope for the five missing Dole flyers and their two would-be rescuers, Capt. Billy Erwin and Alvan Elchwaldt, had all but vanished with the coming of dawn today—one week after the ill-fated "Golden Eagle" and "Miss Doran," hopped off on their disastrous attempt to reach Honolulu.

Capt. Erwin and Navigator Elchwaldt, aboard the "mercy" plane "Dallas Spirit," have been missing since Friday.

Not a single authentic clue as to the fate of the three planes and their seven occupants has been found, despite the fact that innumerable naval vessels, planes and fishing smacks have searched every mile of the great circle course between here and Hawaii.

Reluctantly friends of the missing flyers are resigning themselves to what seems the inevitable. Sympathy centers on Miss Mildred Doran, the 22-year-old Flint, Mich., school teacher, who was a passenger on the plane named for her, piloted by Augy Pedlar and navigated by Vilas Knope.

The fact that Commander Rodgers remained aloft nine days, and was finally rescued, inspired a faint hope in the hearts of some, but the less optimistic reason that Rodgers had a seaplane and was better equipped for the pounding of the waves, it is thought hardly likely that any of the three missing planes could now be afloat.

BLOODHOUNDS HELP POSSES SEARCH FOR ALLEGED MURDERER

Hundred Acre Swamp
Believed Hiding Place
Of Killer

MT. VERNON, O., Aug. 23.—Bloodhounds and a posse of a hundred armed men led by Knox County deputy sheriffs today were searching a hundred acre swamp, at Fredericktown, near here, for the trail of Richard Cole, alias Joseph Smith, alleged slayer of Harry Swank, 17, Ankenytown.

Swank was killed, and Richard Roberts, 20, was shot Sunday night during an argument at Fredericktown. The alleged slayer, fled after the shooting, and search for him was made Monday near Mt. Gilead and Fredericktown. The Mt. Gilead search proved fruitless and Monday night bloodhounds were brought from Pomeroy to scour the swamp, where a man was reported hiding yesterday.

Roberts was discharged from Mercy hospital, here late Monday and returned to his home at Newark.

COMEDIAN SETTLES $825,000 ON WIFE AND TWO CHILDREN

Decree Expected To Cost
Celluloid Clown Over
Million

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 23.—The big studio tent of "The Circus," Charlie Chaplin's unfinished picture, was hoisted and staked out again today as the comedian, now a free man, prepared to resume his acting after an eight months' layoff. Lita Grey Chaplin received an interlocutory decree of divorce from Chaplin yesterday. The comedian settled $825,000 upon her and her two small sons in a property settlement reached out of court.

A trust fund of $200,000 for Sidney Earle, sixteen months, and Charles Spencer, Jr., twenty-six months, was included in the settlement. Mrs. Chaplin will have the babies' custody and will administer the trust fund on their behalf.

Although Chaplin himself was expected to go today to Catalina Island for a short rest, other members of the cast of "The Circus" were ordered to take up work at once on the unfinished comedy. Chaplin and his supporting players, including Merna Kennedy, leading lady, stopped work on the picture when his wife sued for divorce eight months ago.

"The Circus" must be turned over to United Artists for Christmas release, Alfred Reeves, manager of the Chaplin studios, declared, and nothing will be permitted to delay it further.

With the general terms of the property settlement upon Lita Chaplin made public, speculation centered today upon details of the huge award. According to reports considered trustworthy, Mrs. Chaplin will receive $375,000 in cash. The remaining $250,000 will be paid over a three-year period, it was said, with four per cent interest accruing upon the deferred payments. The trust fund will be established within five years, it was reported. Until that time Chaplin will pay $1,000 a month for the care of the children.

In all, the divorce action is expected to cost the comedian well over one million dollars, including such intangible losses as lost earning power during the past eight months. Not considering the loss of earning power or his own attorneys' fees, it was reported that Chaplin will pay approximately $950,000 for his freedom.

SENATOR FESS BELIEVES PARTY WILL DRAFT CAL: FESS NOT CANDIDATE

Fess Boom "Newspaper Talk" Yellow Springs Solon
Tells Crowd—Thinks Convention Deadlock
May Force Coolidge's Hand

United States Senator Simeon D. Fess, Yellow Springs, not only declared there is no foundation for statements that he will be the next Republican candidate for President but prophesied that the 1928 leader will be President Calvin Coolidge, addressing more than 2,000 people at Xenia's community picnic in Shawnee Park Monday night.

Senator Fess was preceded by speakers who paid him tribute with prophecies that he would be the next man to occupy the White House. These prophecies were burst when Senator Fess began his address. "Let me say that while I appreciate for the sake of my family the fine utterances made in reference to my own candidacy, there is absolutely no foundation for reports of any further honors coming to me," Senator Fess said.

The speaker gave as his reason for the persistent mention of his name as a Presidential potentiality, the fact that he had made friends with Washington newspapermen with whom he had built up friendly relationships by taking them into his confidence on important matters. As a result he holds these friends responsible for the reports of his strength as a candidate, he said.

"These notices published in newspapers favorable to your speaker this evening are only the kindly expressions of the newspapermen," he said. "My own judgment is that the next President—the next man to lead the party—is the man who is now President.

Coolidge Sincere.
"That isn't his wish, I've talked to him for three years on this subject and he keeps his own counsel. He doesn't even talk to his wife. You will be interested to know that when he made his announcement August 2, that he did not choose to run again, he did so without consulting Mrs. Coolidge."

Senator Fess returned last Thursday from the West, during which

Defense Workers Receive News In Varied Moods—
Last Defense Card Left Unplayed— Unable To Get Plane

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—Piercing shrieks reached through St. Russell St., West End, as Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti went to their doom this morning.

In the S. Russell St. Apartment of Friends, Miss Luigia Vanzetti, who had crossed the seas from Italy to bid farewell to her "Barto," and Mrs. Sacco, the brave and loyal wife of "Barto's" comrade, received the terrible news. It was relayed to them by telephone from state's prison, across the Charles River in Charlestown.

The cries of anguish of the two grief-stricken women, perhaps the most pathetic figures in the Sacco and Vanzetti case, awoke the neighborhood. Many residents went to the streets.

A crowd soon gathered outside the apartment house. A detail of police kept the crowd at a respectful distance from the house, later members of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense committee arrived to console Miss Vanzetti and Mrs. Sacco.

"Death watches" had been kept at the two Sacco-Vanzetti headquarters. At the old committee headquarters in a modest building on Hanover St. in the North End more than 100 men and women gathered. Every race and creed, every walk in life, gathered to hear the word that the two men had gone into eternity. This six years of labor by the defense committee and women was over—they had lost.

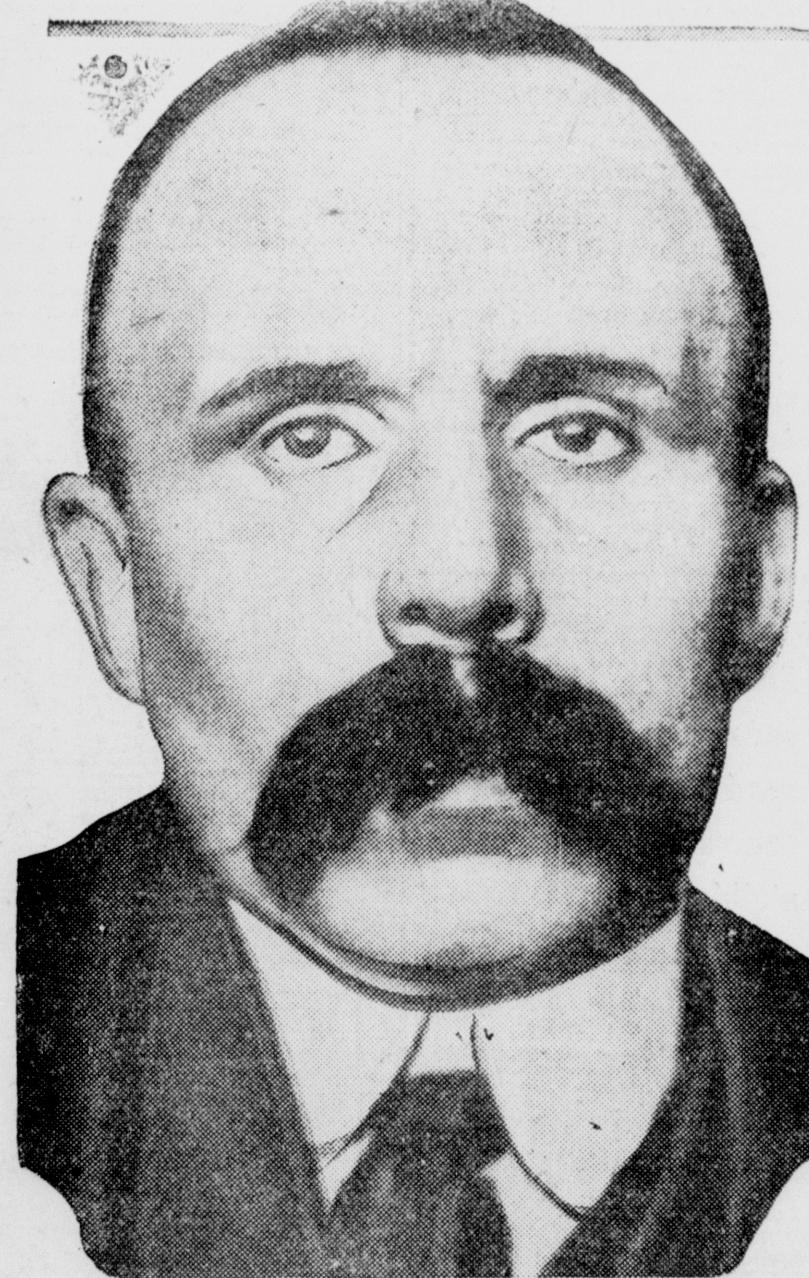

Aldino Fellicani, who organized the committee, nervously paced back and forth across the little room, with its wooden tables and single battered typewriter, from which had come reams of copy for the press.

Miss Mary Donovan, an ardent defense worker, almost fainted when the words "they are dead" were pronounced.

AIR EXHIBITION

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 23.—Nine army truck loads of bombs, bomb racks, parachutes and other airplane paraphernalia used in U. S. Air Service have arrived at the state fair grounds here for a display during the fair. In addition there will be nine planes, seven of which will be flown to Columbus this week. Two others, one a skeleton plane, showing its construction and a small messenger plane will be shipped by truck.

HE LIT A MATCH

Hubert Ponder, Vine St., lighted a match to see how much gasoline there was in a vessel after he had drawn the fluid out of the tank of his automobile in the alley at the rear of his residence at 11:30 Monday night. The gasoline in the can exploded and fearful of a resulting fire, the fire department was called. Firemen extinguished the blaze in the can.

RADICALS DIE AFTER FINAL EFFORTS FOR RESPITE ARE FUTILE

Electric Current Ends Seven Year Fight For Life—
Vanzetti Shouts Innocence—Madeiros Also
Dies—Police Guard Prison

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—Sacco and Vanzetti are dead—but the hue and cry of their dramatic passing rang around the world today.

The end of the seven years fight for life by these convicted radicals—a fight unprecedented in American criminal procedure and unprecedented, too, in its effect on world opinion—came in the eerie hours of this morning in drab old Charlestown prison.

Whining sing-song of an electric current whipped through their bodies and burned out their lives while the guns of 2200 police encircled them to make sure they did not escape Massachusetts justice.

Nothing like it was ever witnessed in an American city. The streets of Boston and other cities saw marching and near-rioting in sympathy with them. From Kamchatka to Rio the radicals of the world protested the innocence of the condemned men and demanded their liberation. In London, Paris, Berlin and Moscow there were riotous demonstrations against America—but they died just the same in grim old Charlestown prison hard by the monument on Bunker Hill and today their bodies lay on marble slabs in the North Grove mortuary.

To the radicals of the world and to their sympathizers among the intellectuals, Sacco and Vanzetti were symbols of legalistic and capitalistic oppression, and martyrs to the cause of political liberalism.

To the law of Massachusetts, master and his guard at South stern and unyielding as the rock of Plymouth, they were a pair of anarchistic aliens who had perpetrated an unusually brutal crime in the murder of a factory paymaster and his guard at South Braintree, and who for seven years have managed to escape paying the penalty thereof.

They died as they lived—defiant, contemptuous of the "system" that took their lives, unrepentant, unorthodox and protesting their innocence to the end. They went to the chair with their heads up, their tread firm, unafraid and without benefit of clergy.

Sacco died almost with "long live anarchy" upon his lips. Vanzetti, older, more kindly, philosophical, proclaimed his innocence while seated in the chair, and was pronouncing his forgiveness of his enemies when the guards stepped back and signalled for the fatal current.

"I am innocent of all crime," said Vanzetti without attempting theatrical gestures. "Not only this one, but all."

He spoke simply, in a quiet voice, as if he had said, "I am tired," he

SPORADIC RIOTING MARKS PASSING OF ALLEGED RADICALS

Police Kept Alert By Protest Meetings Of Sympathizers

BOSTON, Aug. 23.—Sporadic outbreaks marked the passing from the earthly stage of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

In the city of Webster, Worcester County, an explosion, believed by police to be dynamite, ripped up a piece of the sidewalk near the post office.

Two riot calls were sounded by police in Boston. "Mother" Ella Reeves Bloor, Oakland, California, Socialist, was talking to a union meeting in the north end and went to a window to address a crowd of perhaps two thousand persons outside on the street. A squad of uniformed police forced their way into the hall. "Mother" Bloor was arrested, charged with inciting to riot. Another riot call was sounded when, upon her release on bail, "Mother" Bloor returned to the hall and began to speak to the crowd outside. The crowd was dispersed.

Miss Paula Halliday, of Provincetown, was arrested as a parade was being organized at the state house for a march to the state's prison. The protest parade was broken up. Its object was state's prison but a detour was under way for Bunker Hill when police descended on the marchers in Thompson Square.

Foot and mounted police charged the parade, whose ranks had been augmented by a throng of curious spectators along the route. In the crush under the elevated structure at Thompson Square twenty persons were arrested. They were charged with violating a city ordinance.

The plan had been for two lines, one from Essex St., south end, and the other from the state house to meet at the foot of Bunker Hill monument. In the glare of the flood lights that play at night on the great granite shaft stretching into the dark sky, the Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers planned a "death watch." The watch was to be on soil where a century and a half ago General Warren waited until his men saw the whites of the eyes of the red coats. But Thompson Square was the nearest any of the protesters got to Monument Park.

Some time after the execution a crowd of several hundred persons in city square, Charlestown, was broken up by police, who shoed the loiterers away to their homes.

Police had taken elaborate precautions to prevent bombs thrown or other violence but the great army of police and state troopers had little to do.

FRESIDENT OF KENT TARGET OF CHARGES MADE BY GRADUATES

Trustees Considering Report Anderson Is
"Dictatorial"

CLEVELAND, Aug. 23.—Trustees of Kent State Normal College were to reconvene here at 11 a. m. today, to consider charges of mismanagement against Dr. David L. Anderson, president of the school.

Despite statements from board members that a meeting here Monday was purely routine, it was learned that the trustees before adjournment, late yesterday, had heard at least 100 charges filed by the college alumni against Anderson, which apply to every phase of his administration. Most important among them were charges that Anderson had failed to preserve peace in the faculty and that he was extremely "dictatorial."

Although board members here denied that Anderson was to be ousted, press dispatches from Columbus Monday stated that friends of the Kent president were urging Governor Donahay to request the trustees to retain him.

Anderson has held office one year. During that period he has dismissed over a score of the faculty.

DAYTON ON EXPRESS COMPANY AIR LINE

DAYTON, O., August 23.—According to announcements coming from official sources in Cincinnati, Dayton is to be on the air line to be opened September 1 by the American Railway Express Co. Distribution of express matter originating in Dayton will be through Chicago for the west and through Cleveland for the east, via train between Dayton and the two distribution points.

It is said that more than 100 planes will fly over the route in daily service, delivering express from New York to "Frisco" in two days. Packages up to 200 pounds will be handled at a rate of about $2 per pound. Fifty cubic inches is the limit on the size of the packages. No packages will be handled for less than $1.

STEPHENSON RULED THOUGH REIGN WAS MARKED BY FEAR

D.C. STEPHENSON
AT THE HEIGHT OF HIS POWER

By BONITA WITT
Staff Writer for Central Press and
The Evening Gazette

(This is the fourth installment of a series on Indiana's Political Drama.)

The history of D. C. Stephenson, whose continued exposure of threatened exposes have put Indiana on edge, is a dramatic chapter in itself. He ruled—or thought he ruled—a commonwealth. At least, he had many followers.

To many in the state he seemed a leader cast from the skies. And he heightened that impression by arriving at meetings from the skies—in an airplane. He was out of nowhere. He often said: "It's nobody's business where I was born or who my folks were."

Born in Texas, Stephenson was born, however, in Houston, Tex. 36 years ago in 1891 with his parents, brother and sister he moved to Mayeville, Okla., where he finished out the eighth grade in school and then found employment as a printer's apprentice. His father was a tenant farmer and very poor.

In 1911 young Stephenson went to Purcell, Okla., with his brother. The two operated newspapers in Purcell and two other small Oklahoma towns—Byers and Paul's Valley.

That section at the time was undergoing agitation by wandering Socialists, and young David took up his journalistic cudgels against them. Later he succumbed to their doctrine, probably fascinated by fantastic phases of the cause. He became a Socialist lecturer and soon gained a reputation in the region as an amateur orator.

His First Marriage
Stephenson married Miss Nettie Hamilton while in Oklahoma and there are charges that he deserted her shortly after their child was born in 1916.

Stephenson was drafted for army service in 1917 while employed at Boone, Ia., as a linotype operator. Originally a corporal on recruiting duty, he gained a commission as second lieutenant, but saw no service overseas.

Mustered out, Stephenson went to Akron, O., and it is believed made speeches to defeat a congressional candidate "accused" of pro-Germanism. At the same time he promoted the Akron Morning News. It failed.

In Akron he married Miss Violet Carroll. They were divorced in 1923. The year 1920 saw Stephenson in Evansville, Ind., where he organized a coal mining company, said to have holdings in a neighboring county.

Joined With Political Power
Evansville was then under the political thumb of the late Mayor Benjamin Bosse, Democratic state chairman, a man of dynamic character and an uncanny ability to frustrate stronger enemies.

The success of Bosse in the field of politics drew Stephenson to him, a willing disciple. About this time the leaders of the Ku Klux Klan stretched from Atlanta, where the order was born, and first touched Indiana.

Stephenson threw himself into the movement. It seemed the thing for him.

Descends on Indianapolis
Stephenson's rise was meteoric. He became grand dragon of the state Klan and moved from Evansville to Indianapolis. The rise of the Klan and its rapid increase in power virtually made Stephenson, as he stepped off the train at Indianapolis, an uncrowned king entering his new capital.

Court Ashur, former airplane pilot for the government, has been quoted in the past as giving these figures:
Stephenson's pockets received $250 to $300 for every new member admitted to the state Klan. Initiation fee was $10 for the individual. As the Klan soon numbered approximately 400,000 men and women of the state, the golden harvest reached surprising figures. At the peak, a national credit concern gave Stephenson financial rating at $984,000.
The grand dragon built a home in the exclusive Irvington section of Indianapolis. He had a yacht on the Great Lakes valued at $100,000. It later was burned.
Life One of Fear
Though the golden rain gave him increasing luxuries, the grand dragon was haunted by shadows.

ASKS $10,000 FOR DAMAGES RESULT OF AUTO COLLISION

Alleging that he suffered injuries of a permanent nature when an automobile driven by the defendant's minor son collided with his car at the intersection of the Federal Pike with the Jamestown and Cedarville Pike, August 1, Hiram Rogers brought suit for $10,000 damages against Maude Warner in Common Pleas Court Monday. Attorney Charles L. Washington filed the action.

The petition recites that Rogers was driving his automobile east on the Federal Pike, and at the intersection of that pike with the Jamestown and Cedarville Pike, stopped his car, looked to the right and left, shifted into low gear, looked to the right again, and while his car was still in low gear it was struck broadside by the defendant's machine, in which she was a passenger, and which was traveling toward Jamestown.

The crossing in question is a dangerous one the petition recites, because the view to the plaintiff's right and to the defendant's left, were obscured by woods, cornfields and telegraph poles, but that instead of observing caution on that account, the driver of the defendant's car approached the crossing at the rate of 40 miles an hour. Although brakes were applied fifty feet from the crossing, the petition says, the plaintiff's car was pushed more than thirty feet on the roadway, turned, and his head thrown violently against a knob on the door. His neck was injured, all his jaw teeth loosened so that they will have to be extracted, his right shoulder bruised, he was cut over the right eye on top of the head and he suffered a severe nervous shock and is still under the care of a physician.

NEGLECT CHARGED
Mabel Clowney charges John Clowney with neglect in an action for divorce. They were married September 5, 1918 and have a son aged seven years who is a ward of the juvenile court.

CHARGES INFIDELITY
Unfaithfulness is charged by Calvin Brown in a suit for divorce brought against Goldie Brown. They have one child, Paul Leroy. They were married July 5, 1924. Clyde Shoemaker is named as co-respondent in the case.

METHODISTS WILL MEET IN DELAWARE SEPTEMBER 6 TO 12

DELAWARE O., Aug. 23.—Matters of church policy will be voted upon and Ohio's delegates to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in 1928 will be elected at the joint sessions of the Ohio, Northeast Ohio, and West Ohio conferences of the Methodist church here September 6 to 12.

Each of the three conferences will hold separate sessions and the three bodies will join for a combined educational and inspirational program. Bishop Berry will preside over the sessions of the Ohio Conference, Bishop McDowell over those of the Northeast Ohio, and Bishop Wilson over those of the West Ohio Conference.

The joint meeting, which is the first of its kind in the history of Methodism, is being held here because this city is the only one having congregations representing three different conferences and because it is the seat of the Ohio Wesleyan university. Ohio Wesleyan is not only the first and largest Methodist school in Ohio but the only one jointly controlled by the three conferences.

The list of speakers for the joint sessions of the conferences includes: Branch Rickey, vice-president of the St. Louis Cardinals baseball club; Dr. C. J. Galpin, of the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Charles F. Miller, state superintendent of public instruction in Indiana; Bishop Candler of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Senator Willis, Charles H. Lewis, Dr. Thomas H. ## The QUEEN ANNE HOME HEATER

Equal to a Furnace
Cost Far Less

The Queen Anne Home Heater is in reality a good furnace—yet requires no pipes, no registers, no basement. It healthfully circulates warm, moist air through every room in the house.

At the cost and convenience of but one fire, the Queen Anne will warm the upstairs as well as the downstairs, often replacing three or four stoves. Thousands of homes with as many as five to eight rooms—are being supplied with this modern furnace heat by Queen Anne Home Heaters. Also extensively used to heat large halls, churches, theatres, schools, stores, offices, garages, etc.

A fully enclosed, high grade, all cast, genuine warm air furnace, in a beautiful period cabinet. It is not a converted stove. Has 20 to 100 per cent more heating capacity—is built to heat more rooms or larger spaces than other heaters—and is built like a furnace to do it.

BIBLE THOUGHT

MERCY'S UPLIFT:—When I said, my foot slippeth; Thy mercy, O Lord, help me up. Psalm 94:18.

NOT SO MUCH LUCK AFTER ALL

The myth of the "luck" of Lindbergh was short-lived. Its burial grows deeper as one by one the facts back of his historical adventure come to light. First it is discovered that the element of "luck" was eliminated by leaving not the tiniest detail of his remarkable flight to chance. So far as human foresight and engineering skill were adequate to the task, everything was planned and provided for.

Nor did the youthful flyer start off on his record-breaking hop trusting to luck that Paris would be sighted somewhere off there in the East. The month preceding the jump-off of "we" the young aviator spent in intensive study of navigation, especially in the method of dead reckoning which it had been decided to use. He flew with his mind filled with sight pictures of special charts.

But these disclosures do not detract from his achievement nor from public estimation of that achievement. He is more than ever an idol of the people of the world and the patron saint of the romantic and adventurous.

His attitude and conduct since his memorable landing in Paris have had much to do with his canonization and continue popularity. Though feted, cheered and glorified, he remained a modest, good fellow.

Moving pictures of celebrations in his honor show him exhibiting undisguised irritation and disgust with fawning done over him by publicity-seeking "leading citizens." Nobody blame him for his show of some impatience.

NEED BRAINS AND COURAGE, TOO

The announcement of the intention of the American Federation of Teachers to work for a universal compulsory education law for all children under 18 years of age as a remedy for juvenile delinquency may be prevented by quantity rather than the quality of the instruction. It may be desirable that no child be permitted to end its schooling until the age specified, but adding a year or more to the compulsory age will not itself operate to attain the end sought.

It is said that inadequately educated young persons are revealed to grow delinquent morally as well as in industrial and commercial advance, but by no means all of education is in the schools. But for the more valuable part is received in the home, if it is had at all. More schooling might help much but it would not do all desirable in diminishing delinquency. If the right kind of principles are inculcated even though schooling be ended before one is 18 there is very little peril of lapsing into delinquency.

EXTRAVAGANT FOLKS

It costs the government so much more to make a dollar bill than it does to mint a silver dollar that we would save a million a year if we like silver dollars. But folks east of the Pacific coast want paper money, and they are not worrying about Uncle Sam's expenses.

THE PACE

Young women, doing with little sleep and to many social engagements, are shortening their lives, so the head of the Life Extension Institute tells us. The death rate of girls and women between the ages of 17 and 22 is greater than that of boys and men. It takes a rugged body and pretty thick nerves to stand the social pace these days.

THE BELIEVING MIND

Little more than a hundred years ago hard coal couldn't be sold. A man trying to sell some in the streets of Philadelphia was threatened with jail on the charge that he was selling rocks. Now it's a luxury and brings a high price. It doesn't speak very well for man that he has lived so many thousands years on the earth—and only yesterday learned some of the most obvious facts.

There are so many of us like the people who wouldn't buy hard coal, believing it to be rock. Some people are "easy." They believe everything they are told. Even at that, they'll contribute more to human progress, by far, than the narrow, tight-minded ones who won't open the doors of their heads to anything they can't understand.

HE FINISHED THE JOB

A section hand on a New York state railroad was called to a telephone to be told he had inherited a fortune of half a million dollars. Before leaving for New York city to see lawyers he went back to his pick and shovel and finished his day's work. Evidently he's the kind of man who deserves a fortune.

PAYING DEBTS

A man from Oregon came back to a Wisconsin town the other day to pay the county a debt. Twenty years ago the county took care of him when he was sick. In health and prosperity he has not forgotten.

Perhaps the most perfect test of character is the way in which a man regards his obligations.

Songs of a Housewife

UNANSWERABLE

Youngsters are canny, as they find reasons for their acts. They often have an axe to grind When giving Mother "facts."

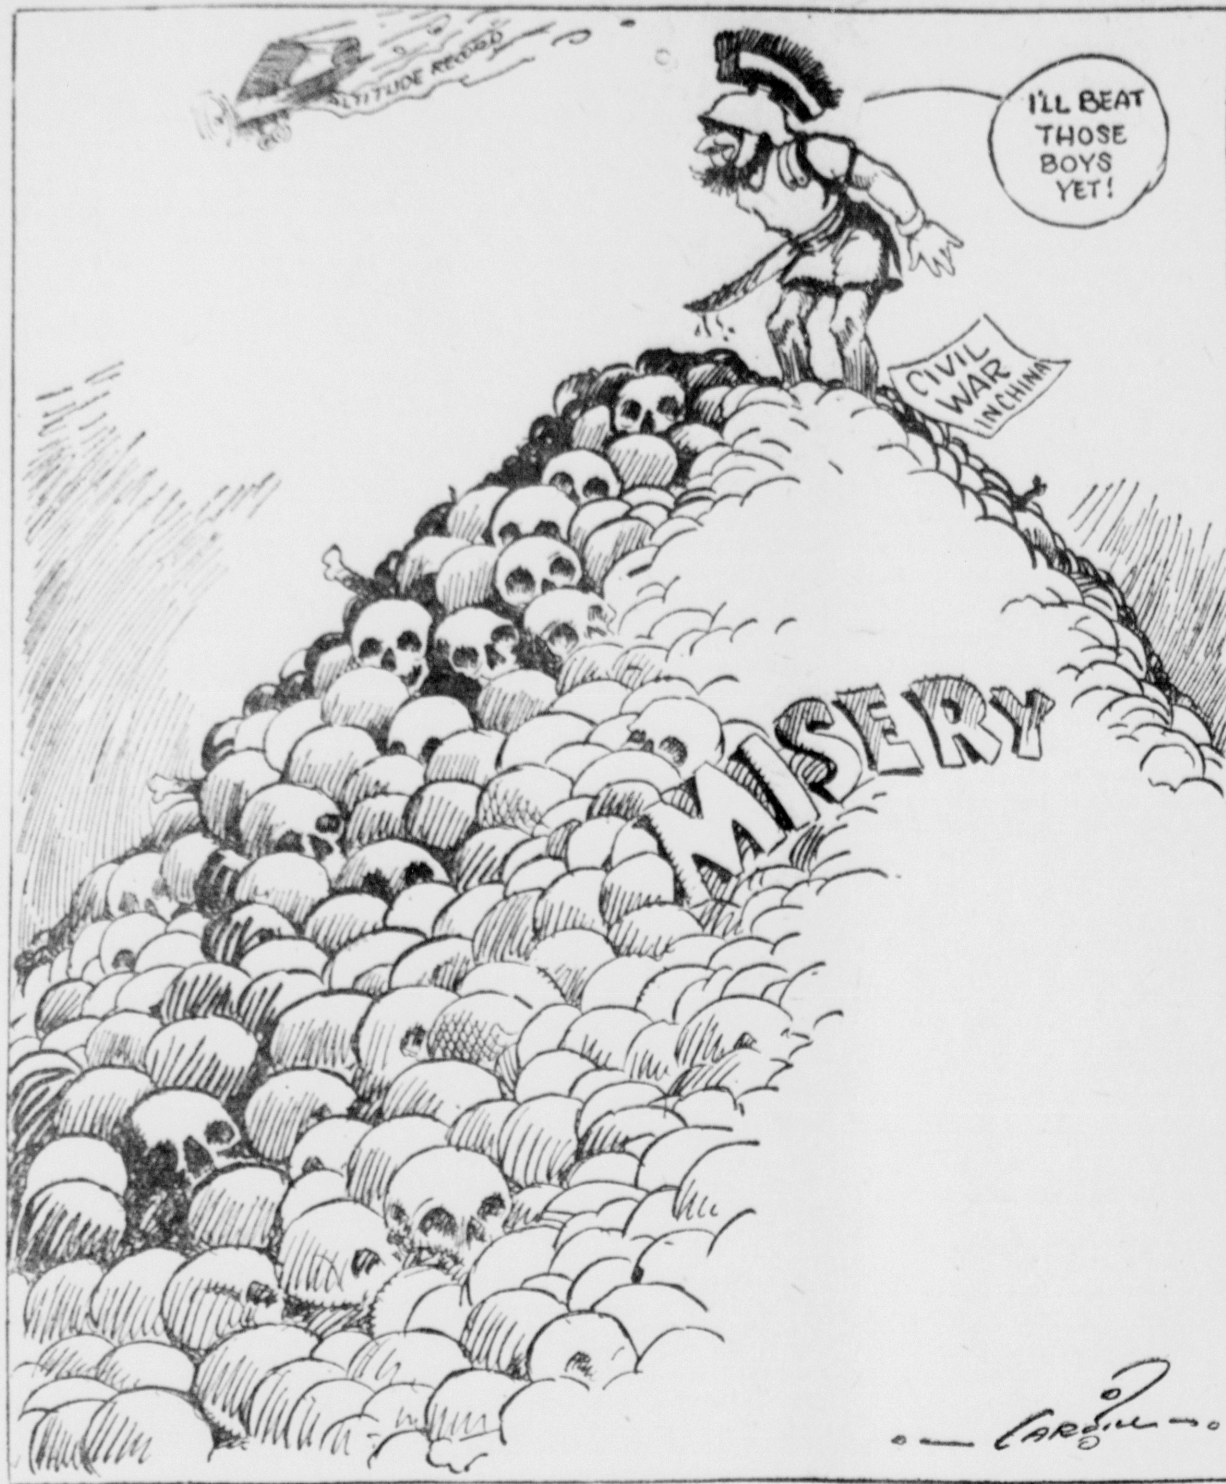

This morning, as they bathed their pup, Who seldom has a flea, They captured four that scrambled up, But two more burrowed free.

Tonight as they prepared to take Their pet with them to bed, "With fleas on him, it's a mistake To let him in," I said.

I put their answer up to you— It put me in a fix: "Why can't he sleep with us, with two— When last night he had six?"

TODAY'S RECIPES

Creamed Cottage Cheese—Into a quart of cottage cheese mix a block of cream, pimento cheese with a cup of thick, sour cream.

Cornmeal Biscuit—Make an ordinary biscuit dough using one-third cornmeal instead of all flour.

Mint Dressing—This is nice on cold tomatoes. Mix a tablespoon of chopped mint leaves into a half cup mayonnaise before serving.

Hermits—One and one-half cups brown sugar, one-half cup butter, two eggs, three tablespoons sour milk, three cups flour, one teaspoon soda, one cup currants, one cup raisins, three-fourths cup nut meats, one tablespoon cinnamon, and a little nutmeg. Drop by spoonfuls in greased pans.

Blanch—means to make white. In cooking it has two meanings, (1) to pour boiling water over, drain, rinse in cold water. This is used for rice, macaroni or spaghetti after cooking, and for vegetables before or after cooking. (2) For nuts. To remove the skin.

SUGGESTIONS

Saves Time and Steps. Time and steps may be saved by keeping a large aluminum salt shaker filled with flour, salt and pepper in a convenient place. This is very handy in making any of the dishes that require these three articles.

Green Casings. Painting window casings and sashes of a gray cottage green is the suggestion of one who did. Moss green was the color used, and it was said that it blended nicely with the curtains and shades, eliminated the usual black sash tracing and produced a pleasing color contrast.

Safety First.

Nail some pieces of rubber to the ends of the stepladder to prevent slipping.

Kellygrams

BY FRED K. KELLY

YOUR ACQUAINTANCE

Your acquaintance is almost the principal thing in life.

If you do not believe this, stop and check up on yourself. Assuming that you have a good job, how did you get it? Wasn't it because somebody you knew recommended you, or told you about the opportunity?

How did you happen to meet your wife, husband or sweetheart? Didn't some friend introduce you? If you hadn't been acquainted with that friend, would you have met the girl?

At the end of any day in which you have accomplished things, look back and see if some friend or acquaintance didn't play an important part.

If a man made a permanent acquaintance of every person to whom he is introduced, he would soon be surprised at the list of people he knows.

Here is a little trick, by the way, about remembering faces: Take particular note of the ears. For they are the one feature that never changes. From childhood to old age, the ears, aside from growing larger, remain the same.

I once asked a friend, famous for the number and variety of his acquaintances, how he does it.

"My recipe is simple," he said.

"I assume that nothing in the whole big world does so much to make a good impression on a stranger as everyday courtesy.

If the man ahead of me at the ice-water tank insists on my drinking first, or hands me the little paper drinking cup he was about to use himself, I thank him. As if I thought he had given me no more than I had coming to me. I thank him out loud, so that he can hear. And at the first opportunity I try to get even by doing some little favor for him. If I haven't a cigar to give him, I at least show that my heart is in the right place by offering him a match.

"If a stranger comes to my office for a conference, I pull up a chair for him with my own hands. When he gets ready to go, I accompany him to the door. Thus his last recollection of me is of my courteously bowing him out.

"If I meet a man on a train or elsewhere and he interests me enough to make a memorandum of his name, I usually follow this man a little later by sending him a postal card or a brief note."

"Think what would happen if you yourself met a man on the train and then got a letter from him. You'd never forget him, would you?"

Webb and Ryder state that it appears many patients do better in varied, semi-severe climates than in very mild climates and equable ones. This is a comfort to those who cannot go to Florida, Colorado or California. However, they state that it is clearly an advantage to be where outdoor life is agreeable at all seasons; but that if you cannot do this with an open fire and open windows you can make a Florida or Colorado or California at home.

You must as far as possible, accustom yourself to be out of doors in all weather, and make a study of the means of keeping yourself comfortable.

Pottenger says: "When tuberculosis is active, it is my opinion that any patient will increase his chances of obtaining a favorable result by the employment of rest. The loss of muscle tone, which will follow the adoption of the rest, will rapidly disappear when the proper time for exercise has come." (Rest implies mental as well as physical repose.)

"Three square meals a day, with plenty of water," is the way Webb and Ryder sum up the diet for tuberculosis. Pottenger states that one of the most rational changes in the treatment is the discarding of overfeeding. However, they state that it means that the tuberculous patient is going to be on a starvation diet which he usually prefers (because one of the symptoms of tuberculosis is loss of appetite).

The diet in tuberculosis does not differ materially from the diet to maintain health (with the exception that more liberal quantities of fat are allowed). Milk, eggs, cream and cod liver oil have always been emphasized in the diet, and in the light of our newer knowledge of nutrition, our confidence has not been misplaced in these foods. They are rich in the fat soluble vitamin A, and as I told you yesterday, the lack of vitamin A is now considered a vital factor in lowering resistance, especially to tuberculosis. Cod liver oil is richer in vitamin A than any other substance, contains very much more than butter. Egg yolk is high in iron as well as vitamin A, and the milk is high in lime, both these minerals being highly essential in normal health, and doubly essential in tuberculosis.

As to the total amount of food taken, Pottenger states that the desirable amount is the least which is consistent with regaining and maintaining what is the patient's best weight in health. It is important that the patient have at least one good evacuation of the bowels, and preferably two or three, daily. This is important for anyone, as we know.

We have an article on Balanced Diet and Constipation, also a list of books on tuberculosis, written for laymen, that may be of use to you. Tomorrow—we'll see him for damages!

My Dear Followers:

When sending for material which we offer you, please remember to enclose a STAMPED, SELF-ADDRESSED envelope hearing your full name and address. The pamphlet on reducing and gaining is the only one for which you must enclose TEN cents in stamps extra. Address your letters to me in care of this paper. Make them as brief as possible, NOT OVER 200 WORDS, and type or write them legibly with ink. Please use your name as evidence of good faith—we will not use it in any way. Remember it is impossible for me to diagnose for you or to answer you personally. I appreciate very much the beautiful letters you send me and regret it is impossible to give you individual advice. The questions you ask will be answered in the column as soon as possible, if they are of general interest. Don't forget the STAMPED, SELF-ADDRESSED ENVELOPE if you expect me to send you the information I have offered.—Lulu Hunt Peters.

NOTES ON THE TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS

Can you be cured if you have tuberculosis? Yes, most certainly, if you have not delayed your treatment too long. And you must remember the healing comes only after a long period of proper care.

Proper care of a person suffering from tuberculosis should be outlined by a physician who has specialized in that disease. Tuberculosis is not a case for home treatment, except under the scientific supervision of a specialist. The so-called "specialists" who advertise in the daily papers and otherwise to reach the layman, are not the ones to choose, for reputable physicians do not advertise.

Of the factors that go to cure tuberculosis, rest, fresh air and an adequate and suitable diet stand highest. The medication is secondary.

Fresh Air and Climate. Pottenger, in his book, "Tuberculosis and How to Combat It," writing of fresh air, states: "Individuals who live in badly ventilated rooms with their bodies surrounded by stale air, lack nerve and mental stability as well as physical tone. They fail to digest and assimilate their food properly, and consequently suffer from low state of vitality. . . . Therefore, open air should surround the patient with tuberculosis for a large portion of each day, if his reacting powers are sufficient to stand it; if they are not, he should be sheltered somewhat, but still be supplied with moving air. . . . He must be prepared for it by suitable clothing, hot bottles and other devices, and should be subjected to the more stimulating conditions gradually. . . ."

Webb and Ryder state that it appears many patients do better in varied, semi-severe climates than in very mild climates and equable ones. This is a comfort to those who cannot go to Florida, Colorado or California. However, they state that it is clearly an advantage to be where outdoor life is agreeable at all seasons; but that if you cannot do this with an open fire and open windows you can make a Florida or Colorado or California at home.

You must as far as possible, accustom yourself to be out of doors in all weather, and make a study of the means of keeping yourself comfortable.

Pottenger says: "When tuberculosis is active, it is my opinion that any patient will increase his chances of obtaining a favorable result by the employment of rest. The loss of muscle tone, which will follow the adoption of the rest, will rapidly disappear when the proper time for exercise has come." (Rest implies mental as well as physical repose.)

"Three square meals a day, with plenty of water," is the way Webb and Ryder sum up the diet for tuberculosis. Pottenger states that one of the most rational changes in the treatment is the discarding of overfeeding. However, they state that it means that the tuberculous patient is going to be on a starvation diet which he usually prefers (because one of the symptoms of tuberculosis is loss of appetite).

For forty years there has been a small jeweler's store on Waverly place. The shop is now conducted by two little old bent men, whose long service in their trade is evidenced by the fact that they flatly refuse to do any sort of repair work on wrist watches. They regard these as new-fangled nonsense and refuse to lower themselves in dallying with such frivolous baubles.

A woman from out of town had a friend from a Long Island suburb visiting her in town. After the theater, the hostess, by some heavy persuasion, induced a hack-driver to take them out to Long Island. And take them by no means an easy thing to do. After the long ride out from and back to town, the woman paid the fare and tipped the driver. Still her conscience troubled her. She felt that perhaps she had not tipped the man sufficiently. So she dove down into her bag and produced a silver flask. To her driver took it calmly, guzzled a hearty draught; then shook his head as if to clear his brain. His eyes watered and he coughed. But always polite, he wiped the mouth of the flask on his sleeve and handed it back.

"No Ma'am," he remarked "that's no drink for a lady!"

A young woman standing in front of a theater during an intermission was garbed in a pale pink dress, cut very low in the back. This frankly, and generously exposed a silver flask. To her driver took it calmly, guzzled a hearty draught; then shook his head as if to clear his brain. His eyes watered and he coughed. But always polite, he wiped the mouth of the flask on his sleeve and handed it back.

I have Said in My Heart

By IDAH M'GLONE GIBSON

and that surely is needless.

YOUTH

"The more I see of girls, the stronger I am in the conclusion that youth is not the happiest age of human beings."

I said this to a girl recently who was telling me some trouble that seemed absolutely trivial to me, but which I could see was a tragedy to her.

It takes a little while to get the right perspective. I remember an old man telling me once that he never answered a letter until six months after he had received it and then as a rule he found that there was nothing in it that needed answering.

It is about the same with the sorrows and troubles of the young. Some young girl thinks she is going to die of grief because the boy who has been attentive to her has suddenly grown tired of her youthful companionship and left her for some one of her friends. She does not know that every woman of thirty is apt to recite her first love with laughter.

If we all married our first sweethearts, I am afraid there would be more divorces than there are now.

Delayed your treatment too long. And you must remember the healing comes only after a long period of proper care. Proper care of a person suffering from tuberculosis should be outlined by a physician who has specialized in that disease. ## DEALERS WILL ENTER AUTOS IN RACE ON LABOR DAY PROGRAM

Many local automobile dealers will enter stock cars stripped down for racing in the race for Greene County cars and drivers only in connection with the automobile races at the Greene County Fairgrounds Labor Day.

Friendly rivalry between the car dealers will make the event of unusual interest and the race should settle the frequent disputes that arise over the comparative speed merits of various pleasure cars sold here.

Indications are that dealers will strip down stock models, taking off bodies and fenders, and settle this one argument on the track. Some of these dealers will drive their own cars. A special cup has been offered for the winner of the event.

The event will be but one of six races scheduled for the day and will add a touch of local color and interest to the program which is expected to draw a number of professional dirt track performers to Xenia for the holiday.

There is also considerable possibility that several local drivers will compete in the other speed events.

INTERESTING SPORTS PROGRAM STAGED AT COMMUNITY PICNIC

Under the direction of Harper C. Pendry, chairman, John C. Ballantyne, and Miss Olive H. Huston, the afternoon's program of sports and games at the Community Picnic was a great success. Hundreds of boys and girls between the ages of eight and fifteen spent a most enjoyable and, to the winners, profitable afternoon.

Beginning at three o'clock the events were run off without mishap and ended at six thirty with the final tilting match. While these contests were taking place several auto polo games also were being played in the field east of the lake. These games were put on through the courtesy of the Xenia Auto Polo Club.

The girls events were run off in rapid order with Miss Huston in charge. The thirty yard dash was won by Margaret Tindell. In the fifty yard dash for girls between eight and twelve, Rose Marie Hornick and Betty Baldwin were winners. Lillian Jenks and Francis Williamson won the fifty yard dash for girls between the ages of twelve and fifteen. The baseball throw was won by Leona Middleton. Two novelty events, a potato race and a clothespin race, were won by Evelyn Jay and Betty Baldwin respectively.

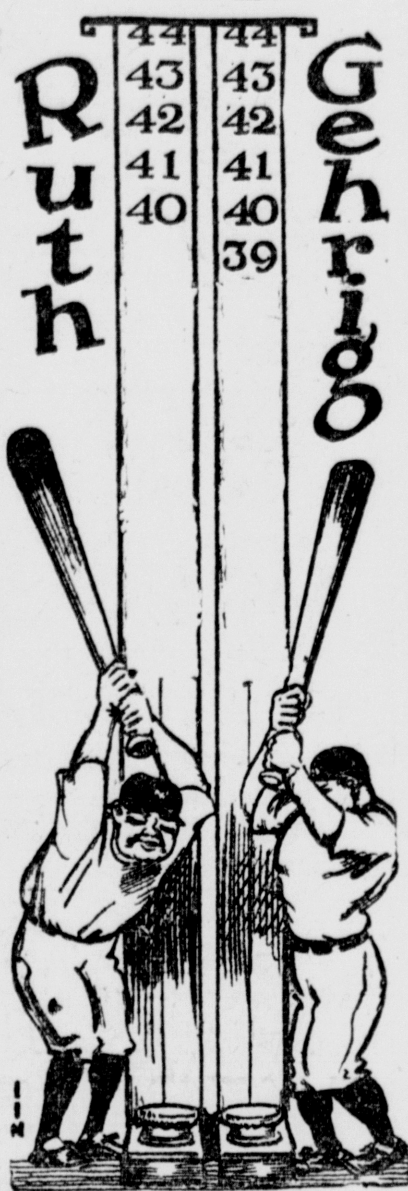

Ralph Baldwin walked away with four first prizes in the contests for boys between the ages of eight and twelve, taking both the fifty and the hundred yard dashes and the standing and running broad jumps. Culver Dawson took three second places in these events and Leo Foley won the other. Morris Oxley proved to be quite a sprinter when he easily won the hundred and fifty yard dash for boys between twelve and fifteen. Baldwin was second in the hundred while Bob Chew did the same in the fifty. The other two events for boys of this age were won by Charles Zell, who took the running broad and running high jump. John Downey and Lewis Hutslar won first and second prizes respectively in the thirty yard dash for boys under eight.

The first tilting match of the evening began at five thirty and finally resulted in a win for the team representing Troop 2 of the Boy Scouts. The loser in this match was the Troop 1 entrant with scouts Price and Hyman as participants. The winning canoe held Charles Zell and Bob Adair. The final score was 24 to 7.

The second of these matches resulted in another victory for the Troop 2 team and earned for them the Bryant Motor Sales Co. prize. Zell and Adair had for their opponents this time, Edward Sayre and Harry Cross. The final score of this match was 36 to 6.

Prizes for all events were donated by Xenia Merchants.

RESERVES WILL OPEN SERIES WITH XENIA MERCHANTS SUNDAY

Xenia Reserves will play the Xenia Merchants next Sunday at Washington Park.

The announcement brings up memories of other interesting series between the Reserves and Merchants when the city championship title was hotly disputed by these teams.

This year the Merchants were not reorganized and have not been performing but for the purpose of keeping alive the old rivalry and interest that marked the games in the past, they will revive the old team for the game Sunday.

Ranks of the nine will be recruited from among star colored players in Detroit, Dayton and other cities. It is announced.

If the team is strong enough to make an interesting argument with the Reserves the games will be run into a series and if not, the Merchants will bring the Indianapolis A. B. C.'s here to meet the Reserves.

GREENE COUNTIANS SHOOTING IN GRAND AMERICAN TOURNEY

Four perfect scores were turned in Monday at the opening of the Grand American tournament of the Amateur Trapshooting Association at Vandalla.

Guy E. Dering, president of the association, a Class B shooter, turned in a perfect score on 200 targets. Others who broke 200 without a miss were: Paul R. Earle, Class A.A. of Starr, S. C.; Allen Held, Class A. Allentown, Pa.; and H. J. Pendergast, Phoenix, N. Y.

Several Greene County marksmen got good starts in the opening of the shoot. B. J. Leveck, Class A, broke 194 birds. Dick Denison, Yellow Springs, G. R. Spahr, Jamestown and Ward Sharp, Jamestown, all Class B, broke 189, 186 and 186 respectively. L. T. Shaner, Cedarville, broke 182 in Class B. Oscar Swigart, Xenia, Class D, scored 183 and John Cyphers, Xenia, in Class C, scored 176.

GOLFERS WILL PLAY WILMINGTON CLUB

Xenia Country Club Golfers will go to Wilmington Wednesday to meet Snow Hill Country Club players in an inter-city match.

Twenty-two Xenia golfers will make the trip, it is believed, and they are urged to arrive early as the players will tee off at 1 o'clock. Snow Hill Club members will be hosts to the visiting players at dinner at the club house at the conclusion of play.

KLAN ATTEMPTS TO REVIVE OHIO ORDER

TOLEDO, O., August 23.—Thousands of Klansmen are gathering here for a Klan celebration beginning today and ending Saturday. Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan will be here to talk. George E. Carr, grand dragon of the realm of Michigan, also will be on the program. A parade, airplane stunts, drum corps exhibitions and other entertainments will be provided, according to posters displayed about the city. The rally is under the auspices of Commodore Perry Klan, Ohio 174.

Politically the meeting is claimed to have some significance, in as much as efforts are being made to revive the order throughout the state.

HALL OF FAME

JOE WRIGHT JR.

ADDED MORE LAURELS TO THE WRIGHT FAMILY BY HIS TWO VICTORIES IN THE CANADIAN SCULLING RACES

Nominating Joe Wright, Jr. Because he's a chip off the old Wright rowing block. Because he has just added new laurels to the family by his two victories in the Canadian sculling races. Because he won the singles title of the Dominion by defeating Frank Adams of Vancouver in the finals. Because he turned back W. E. Garrett Gilmore, of Philadelphia in the quarter-mile event, to make the other victory more impressive. And because his showing gives him hope of capturing the British Diamond sculls event the next time it is held. He rowed his way to the final in the last one.

W. L. Moore, of Dayton, was fined $15 and costs on a charge of reckless driving by Probate Judge S. C. Wright Monday. He pleaded guilty. Moore, who is employed at Wright Field, was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Kenneth Barr, county road patrolman, near the aviation field last Friday.

Peter's Adventures

THE HOUSE ON HIS BACK
"Into what house?" asked Peter, who had listened carefully to the fellow but couldn't make out what he was talking about.

"How could any one go indoors and leave his head and feet outside. You must be crazy! And do stop drawing in yours and poking them on again. You make me think of a Jack in the box."

The strange creature made a sound that sounded more like a sneeze than anything else.

"Which question shall I answer first?" asked he, and twisted his neck to grin up at the Boy. Peter didn't like to be teased and he spoke sharply.

"The first of course."

"Well, then, the house on their backs," declared the fellow. "And the reason you think nobody can go indoors and leave out his head and feet is because you don't know anything at all about the Turtle family!"

"But I thought you said I guess ed wrong. I told you that you were a Turtle a few moments ago, now you say you're not!" Peter was growing more puzzled all the while. The voice of the box chuckled again.

RADICALS DIE WHEN FINAL EFFORTS FOR RESPITE ARE FUTILE

lay quietly and waited for death. Not so Sacco. Younger, more volatile and impetuous, his first cry upon entering the death chamber was, "Long live anarchy!" and his last, "farewell, my mother."

Proceeding then to the chair was Celestino Maderros, a Portuguese bank bandit, who killed a cashier in Wrentham while in the act of holding up the place. Oddly enough, Maderros had confessed to the same murder for which Sacco and Vanzetti were executed and his co-cessioner, exonerated the two radicals. But the law of Massachusetts refused to believe him.

Phlegmatic and sullen, seemingly indifferent to his fate, Maderros had eaten everything that came his way during his long stay in the death house. He had eaten and slept the long days and nights away. He even had to be awakened three hours before his execution to be informed that this was his last night on earth. And having heard it, he turned over and was asleep again in five minutes. He marched stolidly to the chair and did without a murmur. No body plopped or tossed bombs in his behalf.

The scene at Charlestown prison probably was without parallel in American criminality.

Eight hundred police and state police, armed with riot guns, riot clubs and 45 automatics encircled the old prison in a ring of steel.

Backing them up were machine guns mounted atop the walls. Powerful searchlights sprayed the adjacent streets to seek out possible trouble. For four blocks around the prison the streets were roped off, and nobody was permitted to enter without a pass signed by Warden Wm. Hendry, reinforced by a police platoon.

Just off the main gate a temporary press room had been established with special wires leading to many cities, and in this restricted space three score perspiring reporters and telegraphers labored to inform the world as to how Sacco and Vanzetti died. The flash of their successive deaths was bulletined in London, Paris and other world capitals almost as soon as it was in New York and Chicago.

Several miles away, in a closely guarded office on the third floor of the capitol, sat Governor Alvan T. Fuller, whose official duties for anyone in the White House. "My mind is made up," he added.

Possibility of Draft

Senator Fess told his listeners that he pointed out to President Coolidge that while his statement takes him out as far as being a candidate is concerned, that the party would eventually fall back upon him. The speaker said that he told President Coolidge that a dozen candidates from as many states would divide the early convention votes and that the convention would eventually deadlock, possibly over such candidates as Hughes, Dawes, Hoover and Lowden. Then, Senator Fess predicted, there will be a universal turning to the President with the result that he will be unanimously nominated and the convention will recess until his acceptance is given. "And for Heaven's sake don't turn it down," Senator Fess said he told the President.

"I'm happy to hear these laudatory statements about myself, yet there isn't any possibility of what my friends have put in your mind," said the speaker. "If I thought anything like it was to take place, I'd be the most unhappy person here tonight." He pointed out the burdens of the presidency and the self-sacrifices any incumbent must make.

Coolidge Anecdotes

From the wealth of personal information Senator Fess has acquired about the president, he told intimates of the president's life. Answering the accusation that President Coolidge has no sense of humor, Dr. Fess told an amusing story that the president had told him on one occasion and repeated the answer the president gave Allen Treadwell, his personal friend, when the latter admitted he had a photograph of Coolidge as vice president but wished a new one of him as president. "Why Allen, I'm using the same face," was the president's retort.

Senator Fess said the president was absolutely silent when he attempted to discuss with him the appointment of a governor general of the Philippines and was nearly so when he mentioned the vacant ambassadorship to Mexico. At that time President Coolidge pointed out that the Mexico City portfolio was the most delicate point in the diplomatic service, Senator Fess said.

Tribute to First Lady

"Much of the success of President Coolidge is due to his wife," Mrs. Grace Coolidge, said Senator Fess. "I don't know of any personality more gracious. I have seen her meet 1,000 people in a night and give each a fresh smile. I'm sure there has never been anyone more gracious than she in the White House."

Senator Fess closed by pointing out the enormous advantages of this country in comparison with those of Mexico, where many people like to believe a government as successful as ours could be maintained. His only reference to the Sacco-Vanzetti case was indirect, when he said that while he believes in the freedom of speech and of the press, he is unalterably opposed to aliens meeting to assault the American government and the principle on which this country is founded.

The celebration took on the nature of a dedication for Shawnee Park as speakers extolled its virtues and advantages. City Manager S. O. Hale, as general committee chairman, was in charge of the speaking program which followed musical numbers by a Columbus broadcasting orchestra brought here by Oliver Belden.

McChesney Heard
Community singing led by Mayor John W. Prugh followed and Miss Zella Soward sang a solo honoring Mrs. Charles A. Kelbie, cert.

Garden Club president, who initiated the community picnic program, accompanied by Miss Helen Hurley at the piano. Words for the song were written by Miss Mary Kennedy, W. Second St.

City Manager Hale introduced State Senator L. T. Marshall who presented the first speaker, Dr. W. R. McChesney, president of Cedarville College. Dr. McChesney complimented the assemblage and the new park and P. H. Flynn, whose gift of the acreage made the development possible. Both Dr. McChesney and Mayor Prugh, who followed him and introduced Senator Fess, spoke of the new senator as the "next president."

During an intermission in the speaking program the Cadet Band from the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home played one number and after the speaking program concluded, the Xenia Municipal Band followed with a concert.

Sally's Shoulders

by BEATRICE BURTON, Author of "HER MAN," "HONEY LOU," "THE HOLLYWOOD GIRL," ETC.

READ THIS FIRST:

SALLY JEROME, pretty and clever, is the mainstay of her family. But the absence of her father, who does not live with her mother. Mrs. JEROME enjoys poor health, so Sally does the housework mornings and office work for Mr. PEEVEY down town afternoons. Her brother, EMILY, and sister, MILLIE, give little towards the support of the home, and the financial burden falls heavily upon Sally.

In the flat below the Jeromes lives TED SLOAN, who wants Sally to marry him and keep on working. But the only man who interests her is JOHN NYE, whose real estate office is across the hall from Mr. Peevey's. Nye hires Millie as his secretary and becomes blindly infatuated with her. Millie flirts with the notion of marrying him, but really prefers DAVIDSON, a bond salesman whom she met in a former job.

Beau possesses some bad checks, and "burrows" some money from the bank where he works. Sally gets the money to make good his theft from Mr. Peevey, who is retiring from business because of ill health. Beau and his bride, MAE, having used all their earnings for such luxuries as second-hand cars and fur coats, return home to live. They pay almost no board, and Sally is frantic.

Then Millie has an appendicitis operation, and John Nye pays for her room and nurse at the hospital. While she is there Sally does her work in Nye's office, and he offers her a permanent position. She refuses it, and goes into the restaurant business with her aunt, EMILY. JEROME, who has turned her country home into a wayside inn. The business does not thrive and Sally spends most of her time at the inn, where she and Aunt Emily do all the work of cooking, serving, etc. Mrs. JEROME decides to bring the whole family to live, and despite Aunt Em's protests, does. She says she can't get along without Sally to look after her. Aunt Em hires a jazz band and tries to compete with "The Lark," a nearby roadhouse. But business is so better. One Sunday afternoon John Nye drops in and tells Sally that if she and her aunt go out of business he would like her to work for him again.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER XLIV
"I DIDN'T come out here to sing the blues," John said, with a serious half-smile. "But when Millie said your business was as good as you expected it to be, I had an idea you might start work again. And this time I didn't want to lose you, so I thought I'd get my offer in first."

"Offer?" echoed Sally, flushed and wide-eyed above the lilac dress that brought out the beauty of her deep, blue eyes.

John nodded. "I'd start you out at $150 a month in my office," he answered quietly, and Sally shook her head.

"No. I'll stick to this until it falls or until we make a go of it," she said firmly. She looked squarely at John Nye, and his eyes held hers like a magnet.

It was at this moment that an unseen door slammed somewhere in the back of the house, and shuffling steps came slowly across the wide hall.

Mrs. Jerome stood in the doorway, her arms full of Sunday papers and magazines, her large form encased in the tight gray silk dress that she wore on Sunday afternoons. A telltale cake crumb was in one corner of her mouth.

She frowned at Sally, shook her head, and then gave John the most beaming smile Sally had ever seen upon her face.

"Oh, Mr. Nye!" she twittered. "I'll tell Millie you're here! And with another frown at Sally she turned and went padding upstairs.

In a moment her voice came floating down from the upper floor: "Sally! Sally-ee! I want you!"

She was standing in the middle of the hall when Sally ran up to her, still holding her papers clasped to her bosom.

"Millie wants you to powder her neck and back for her," she said, and followed Sally into the middle bedroom where Millie held forth among her perfume bottles and boudoir pillows. Millie's room always looked like a cross between a junk shop and a fancy powder box.

She was sitting up in bed, yawning and blinking now.

"What did you wake me up for?" she demanded of her mother. "I was up so late last night."

"I told you Mr. Nye is down stairs," said Mrs. Jerome, importantly. She said in the same awed voice in which she might have announced that the Archbishop of Canterbury had come to pay them all a visit.

Then she turned upon Sally. "Mr. Nye has told your sister that Mr. Nye was here!" she said reverently. "You knew he was here to see her and not you, Sally! I declare, you're getting to be more like your Aunt Em every day of your life. Just taking the law into your own hands about everything!"

"Mother, I told him I'd call Millie, and he said he wanted to see me!" Sally broke in indignantly. "He offered me a position in his office."

Mrs. Jerome let out a sniff that would have done credit to Aunt Emily. "Well, that's a very queer thing!" said she, "for a man to come away out here in the country to offer you a job. . . . I wouldn't trust these rich young men too far, if I were you, girl. They don't have any honorable intentions towards you, make sure of that."

"Oh, Mother!" giggled Millie. "I've been running around with John Nye for months, and he's as harmless as a fly. You make me laugh!"

"Put on a show—that's the idea!" he said.

Mrs. Jerome managed to look wiser than an owl as she answered: "He may be as harmless as a fly, but I notice he's too clever for you, Millie."

Millie flushed. "What do you mean?"

"Why, you've been saying that he'd marry you in a minute if he could," explained her mother, her eyes narrowed above her fat cheeks. "But you know that isn't the truth! You know you telephoned him yourself the other night and asked him to take you for a drive. It's your own being doing the chasing lately."

Millie flushed even more deeply. "Oh, he's just peevish at me because David Davidson came up into the office to see me a few times," she answered, sulking, swinging her bare little feet over the side of the bed.

"Go on downstairs, Sally, and ask him to stay for supper," she said to her sister. "Set a table for him and me in the little dining room."

When Sally went down stairs John Nye was standing in the little reception room, looking at Aunt Emily's collection of Toby jugs and Bristol glass.

"Beautiful old stuff," he remarked as he turned away from it. "I like to see you here in this old house. You belong here—not in an office."

If lightning had struck Sally she could not have been more speechless than she was for fully five minutes after he had said that.

With a dazed little smile she left him standing alone in the room, where the fragrance of the lilacs outside made the air sweet, and the leafy trees made green gloom.

A minute or two later, as she passed the door with a big tray in her hands, she saw him still standing there, looking down into the green garden. He was so deep in thought that he did not even look up at her.

Presently he came to the door of the room where she was sitting a little table. "Well, I must be off," he said. He was holding out his right hand and he had his hat in the other.

"Oh, no!" she cried. "I forgot. Millie told me to ask you to stay to supper. Please do. I want to show you how well I can cook. After those terrible drug store sandwiches that I used to bring you, I think I owe you something decent to eat."

His face was serious. "I never enjoyed anything more than those sandwiches," he said quietly. "It was those sandwiches—and all the other nice things that you did for me—that brought me here today. You made my work a lot easier down town than it ever was before, or than it has been since. I miss you."

Again came that foolish impulse of Sally's to cry. She struggled with it, but she could feel the warm tears in the back of her throat and in her eyes.

"Hey, you, Sally!" called a loud voice in the outer room, and she gave a start.

It was Ted Sloan's voice, and suddenly she remembered that he had been threatening all week to come out for Sunday night supper.

In an instant she was at the door, and she was herself again, holding out her hand in welcome and smiling her swift, bright smile.

"Hello, Ted!" she cried warmly. But Ted did not answer her or touch her hand she held out to him.

to kiss her—that he never had kissed her with her unspoken or spoken consent in all her life.

"After all, he probably doesn't care whether Ted kisses me or not. It's nothing to him," she said to herself, when she could begin to think clearly again.

All the same she hated to have him think that the exchange of kisses between herself and Ted Sloan was a habit of theirs.

"Well, so here you are!" Millie's gay voice came from the outer room and her blond head shot around the door. "What are you all doing in here? Hello, Johnny, going to stay for supper?"

She came swaying into the room, all slenderness and curves, all perfume and color, all warmth and radiance and lure.

She walked straight up to John Nye, and stood just as close to him as she could, looking straight up into his eyes. It was a trick that she had learned from watching Greta Garbo on the screen, and Sally had seen her practice it in her own room dozens of times.

But John Nye was utterly indifferent to it and to her. His dark eyes were quite cold as he looked down at her.

"No, I can't stay tonight, Millie," he said. "I'm sorry."

He went.

Millie followed him as far as the brown car, and stood there talking to him for a minute or two. But he started the motor running as if he were in a hurry to be off, and after a bit Sally saw him raise his hat and wave. Then he came slowly up the steps and into the house.

"The big High-Hat!" she snapped, when she was inside the hall and closing the heavy oak door behind her. "Sore at me, I suppose, because I want out a couple of times with David Davidson!"

She came close to Sally, who was standing in the doorway of the dining room.

"When your Boy Friend's gone, I want to ask your advice about something," she said in a low tone, and went upstairs to go back to bed. She usually rested all day Sunday.

It was Ted Sloan who put the brilliant idea into Sally's head.

Sally had been telling him how poor business was in the House by the Side of the Road, and he himself had seen how few people came there that Sunday night.

"Your place lacks pep!" said Ted, who knew some of the rules of selling, picked up in his own business of selling automobiles. "Now, you take this place down the road, the Lark, as they call it."

"Don't talk to me about that road-house!" groaned Sally. "They have a thousand dollars to spend where Aunt Em and I haven't a thousand pennies! They hired a couple of professional dancers lately, for instance. A couple of Spaniards who know the tango and the bolero."

"That's just what I'm driving at!" interrupted Ted. "All kidding aside, Sally, you're the best dancer I ever saw! If you'd do some exhibition dancing here, you'd draw the crowds. Not at first, but pretty soon people would hear about you. . . . Put on a sort of one-act show! That's the idea! And you could do it, all alone, and it wouldn't cost you a penny."

He was going, and Sally walked beside him out to where his car stood in the darkness of the driveway.

"Don't talk like a simp, Ted!" she said sharply. "You know I'm not good enough to dance in public."

"Not good enough!" There was a pause while he turned to look intently at her. In the moonlight darkness her skin was like cream satin, her eyes big and shadowy.

"You're beautiful," he said, his voice thick and husky, and suddenly, without warning, he kissed her again. Not the way he had in the afternoon, for John Nye's benefit, but with a certain hard impatience, bending her head back and taking her breath away.

"Now, don't get gay with that Nye gink!" he said when he had let her go. "Because I won't stand for it!"

to kiss her—that he never had kissed her with her unspoken or spoken consent in all her life.

"After all, he probably doesn't care whether Ted kisses me or not. It's nothing to him," she said to herself, when she could begin to think clearly again.

All the same she hated to have him think that the exchange of kisses between herself and Ted Sloan was a habit of theirs.

"Well, so here you are!" Millie's gay voice came from the outer room and her blond head shot around the door. "What are you all doing in here? Hello, Johnny, going to stay for supper?"

She came swaying into the room, all slenderness and curves, all perfume and color, all warmth and radiance and lure.

She walked straight up to John Nye, and stood just as close to him as she could, looking straight up into his eyes. It was a trick that she had learned from watching Greta Garbo on the screen, and Sally had seen her practice it in her own room dozens of times.

But John Nye was utterly indifferent to it and to her. His dark eyes were quite cold as he looked down at her.

"No, I can't stay tonight, Millie," he said. "I'm sorry."

He went.

Millie followed him as far as the brown car, and stood there talking to him for a minute or two. But he started the motor running as if he were in a hurry to be off, and after a bit Sally saw him raise his hat and wave. Then he came slowly up the steps and into the house.

"The big High-Hat!" she snapped, when she was inside the hall and closing the heavy oak door behind her. "Sore at me, I suppose, because I want out a couple of times with David Davidson!"

She came close to Sally, who was standing in the doorway of the dining room.

"When your Boy Friend's gone, I want to ask your advice about something," she said in a low tone, and went upstairs to go back to bed. She usually rested all day Sunday.

It was Ted Sloan who put the brilliant idea into Sally's head.

Sally had been telling him how poor business was in the House by the Side of the Road, and he himself had seen how few people came there that Sunday night.

"Your place lacks pep!" said Ted, who knew some of the rules of selling, picked up in his own business of selling automobiles. "Now, you take this place down the road, the Lark, as they call it."

"Don't talk to me about that road-house!" groaned Sally. "They have a thousand dollars to spend where Aunt Em and I haven't a thousand pennies! They hired a couple of professional dancers lately, for instance. A couple of Spaniards who know the tango and the bolero."

"That's just what I'm driving at!" interrupted Ted. "All kidding aside, Sally, you're the best dancer I ever saw! If you'd do some exhibition dancing here, you'd draw the crowds. Not at first, but pretty soon people would hear about you. . . . Put on a sort of one-act show! That's the idea! And you could do it, all alone, and it wouldn't cost you a penny."

He was going, and Sally walked beside him out to where his car stood in the darkness of the driveway.

"Don't talk like a simp, Ted!" she said sharply. "You know I'm not good enough to dance in public."

"Not good enough!" There was a pause while he turned to look intently at her. In the moonlight darkness her skin was like cream satin, her eyes big and shadowy.
